ATTORNEY FOR PETITIONER

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Is an on duty uniformed police officer as a matter of law acting outside the course and scope of his employment so as to preclude the common law tort liability of his employer when he sexually assaults in his patrol car a female motorist arrested and placed in custody pursuant to the authority of his office?

2. Can the Court of Appeals in the absence of any authority from the Texas Supreme Court ignore clear authority from Texas' intermediate appellate courts upholding employer vicarious liability for sexual assaults committed by their on duty employees and hold to the contrary consistent with the Rules of Decision Act 28 U.S.C. § 1652 and the teaching of Erie v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938)?

3. Is the failure of the Court of Appeals to apply the clear, long standing rule of Texas common law that an ambiguous insurance contract is to be construed against the insurer in the face of the court's finding as a matter of law that the insurance contract at issue is ambiguous, violative of the Rules of Decision Act 28 U.S.C. § 1652 and the teaching of Erie v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938)?

4. Did the decision of the Court of Appeals deny Petitioner her right to due process of law and to a jury trial guaranteed by the Fifth and Seventh Amendments to the United States Constitution in holding as a matter of law that a sexual assault committed by an on duty uniformed police officer in his patrol car upon a female motorist arrested and placed in custody by an exercise of the authority of his office, was not in the course and scope of the officer's employment?

5. Did the Court of Appeals err in violation of the teaching in Lehman Brothers v. Schein, 416 US 386 (1974) in not granting Petitioner's request to certify to the Texas Supreme Court the question of whether a sexual assault by an on duty uniformed police officer in his patrol vehicle upon a female motorist placed in custody by authority of his office, was entitled to a jury trial on whether the assault was in the course and scope of the officer's employment, the question having never been addressed by the Texas Supreme Court, but having been answered affirmatively by Texas' intermediate appellate courts?

6. Was the retroactive application of a common law statute of limitations decision to Petitioner's claims of insurance bad faith in violation of the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution, and this Court's rules on retroactivity?

7. Does the Court of Appeals' decision deny Petitioner due process and equal protection of the law as guaranteed by the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution in applying a different standard of vicarious tort liability to sexual assault victims, who are overwhelmingly female, than to victims of non-sexual assaults?

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE
UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

To the Honorable, the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Petitioner herein prays that a Writ of Certiorari issue to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to review that Court's July 6, 1992 Judgment and Opinion in this proceeding. Petitioner's Motion for Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc was denied on August 21, 1992.

The original Opinion for the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, dated April 9, 1992, parts of which are adopted in the Court's subsequent Opinion was not reported and is attached hereto as Exhibit A to this Petition.

The Opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit on Petition for Rehearing and Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc on behalf of Respondent Imperial Casualty and Indemnity Company and Special Risks, Inc. and dated July 6, 1992 and from which review is sought was not reported and is attached as Appendix B to this petition.

The Order of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit denying Petition for Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc is not reported and attached as Appendix C.

The Opinion of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas is reported at 762 F. Supp. 1364 (N.D. Tex. 1991) ans attached as Appendix D.

JURISDICTION

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit entered its order denying Petitioner's Motions or Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc from which review is sought on August 21, 1992. Jurisdiction is conferred upon this Court by 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTES AND RULES INVOLVED

Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution

> No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presented or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the > Militia, when an actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject to the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled at any criminal case to be witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution

> In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, then according to the rules of the common law.

Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution Section 1

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of > citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Rules of Decision Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1652

> The laws of the several states, except where the Constitution or treaties of the United States or Acts of Congress otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision in civil actions in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

1. Course of proceedings and disposition in court below. Petitioner, Roberta McLaren commenced her suit against Officer Larry Taylor and the City of Bedford, Texas, in the 153rd Judicial District Court of Tarrant County, Texas, charging Taylor with assault, sexual assault, false arrest, false imprisonment, intentional infliction of emotional distress and violation of her rights as guaranteed by the Fourth, Fifth, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. (R. 628) McLaren alleged that Taylor was in the course and scope of his employment at the time he attacked her following a routine traffic stop. After a settlement with the City of Bedford on June 26, 1989 at the conclusion of a trial before the court, judgment was rendered against Taylor who represented himself pro se during the course of litigation and failed to appear at trial. (R. 579) Following the rendition of judgment, McLaren discovered that Taylor was the beneficiary of a liability insurance policy obtained for him by his employer, the City of Bedford, and obtained from him an assignment of his cause of action to proceed against the insurance company who had refused him both a defense and indemnity claiming the policy did not cover the allegations made against Taylor. (R. 970) On May 15th, 1990, McLaren commenced this suit in Texas state court and Defendants removed the action to the District Court for the Northern District of Texas. (R. 10) On February 12, 1991, the District Court granted motion for summary judgment for all Defendants and McLaren appealed. On April 9, 1992, the panel of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit rendered a per curiam opinion in part reversing the District Court judgment and rendering judgment in favor of McLaren holding that the insurance contract at issue was ambiguous and, applying well established Texas case law, held that such ambiguity compels Texas courts to find in favor of coverage and against the insurer. (Appendix B) Imperial Casualty & Indemnity Company moved for rehearing en banc as well as for panel rehearing. On July 6, 1992, without affording McLaren the opportunity to respond to the request for panel rehearing, the panel substituted its prior opinion with an opinion once again finding the insurance contract at issue ambiguous but nevertheless holding against McLaren on all counts. (Appendix A) McLaren's Petition for Panel Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc was denied on August 21, 1992.

2. Statement of facts. On the evening of April 22, 1985, Roberta McLaren left the Steak & Ale Restaurant in Hurst, Texas, having had dinner with some of her friends. (R. 988, 1033) On her way home along the busy airport freeway she was stopped by Bedford Police Officer Larry Taylor in uniform and on duty, and having presented him with her drivers license, was asked to perform a field sobriety test. (R. 988, 1033) Having completed the test, but not able to provide proof of liability insurance, Officer Taylor issued her a traffic citation for having no proof of liability insurance and then instructed her to get into her car and to follow him. (R. 988, 1033) Thinking she was being arrested and taken to jail she complied. (R. 988) A short distance off the freeway and in the area McLaren thought was the police station, she was instructed to enter the police vehicle and at this point, Officer Taylor, with his hand on his firearm, instructed McLaren to partially undress and forced her to perform an oral sex act on him. (R. 988, 1033) Altering the citation he had presented to her, he ordered her to leave. She proceeded to a convenience store where she hysterically summoned police from another jurisdiction and reported the incident. (R. 988. 1033) Prior to the assault on McLaren, Officer Taylor had sexually assaulted three other women while performing police functions, one a female police officer. His chief was aware of two of the three assaults. (Chief Lightford Deposition, pp. 175-95)

Imperial Casualty & Indemnity Company had issued a Law Enforcement Liability policy to the City of Bedford, Texas, covering police officers who were employed by the City at the time of the incident in question. (R. 656, Appendix C) The policy promised to pay on behalf of the insured all sums to which the insured would become legally obligated to pay as damages because of "wrongful acts arising out of law enforcement activities." (R. 656, Appendix C) Wrongful acts were defined to include acts of an officer "within the scope of his employment or official duties pertaining to the law enforcement functions of the Insured." (R. 656, Appendix C) Also pertinent was the definition of personal injury which included among other things false arrest, false imprisonment, assault and battery, mental anguish, and deprivation of any rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States of America." (R. 656, Appendix C) The District Court granted summary judgment holding, as a matter of law, that sexual assault by definition was not in the course and scope of employment. 762 F.Supp. at 1369-71.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I. IN A CASE REMOVED BY DIVERSITY JURISDICTION TO THE FEDERAL COURT, THE COURT OF APPEALS, ON AN IMPORTANT QUESTION OF WHETHER A VICTIM OF SEXUAL ASSAULT IS ENTITLED TO A JURY DETERMINATION OF THE TORT RESPONSIBILITY OF HER ATTACKER'S EMPLOYER, DISREGARDED CLEAR, RECENT DECISIONAL LAW OF TEXAS INTERMEDIATE APPELLATE COURTS UPHOLDING SUCH A RIGHT, AND, HELD AS A MATTER OF LAW THAT NO SUCH RIGHT EXISTS, CONTRARY TO THE RIGHT TO DUE PROCESS GUARANTEED BY THE FIFTH AMENDMENT; THE RIGHT TO A JURY TRIAL GUARANTEED BY THE SEVENTH AMENDMENT; AND THE RIGHT TO EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAW GUARANTEED BY THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION; THE RULES OF DECISION ACT 28 U.S.C. § 1652; AND THE TEACHING OF ERIE V. TOMPKINS, 304 US 64 (1938) AND HANNA V. PLUMER, 380 US 460 (1965).

In Meritor Savings Bank v. Vinson, 477 US 57 (1986) this Court granted certiorari to review "important questions concerning claims of workplace 'sexual harassment' . . . " in the context of Title VII, 1964 Civil Rights Act. 477 US at 59. Acknowledging the "debate over the appropriate standard for employer liability" the court declined on the state of the record to "issue a definitive rule on employer liability", but noted the probable applicability of common law agency principles. 477 US at 72. The holding of the Court of Appeals in this case, on common law agency grounds that, as a matter of law, sexual assault could not be within the course and scope of employment would nullify this Court's holding in Meritor, supra. The unfortunate prevalence of sexual assault by those in positions of authority whether they be police officers or employers has resulted in a number of well reasoned decisions holding that the employers responsibility for the conduct of its employees in this area is one of fact to be determined by a jury. Mary M v City of Los Angeles, 814 P.2d 1341 (Cal. 1991) (Facts very similar to the case at bar.) Graham v. Saux Prairie Police Commission, 915 F.2d 1085 (7th Cir. 1990); Dias v. Sky Chefs, Inc., 919 F.2d 1370 (9th Cir. 1990). In order to encourage employers to take an active role to eliminate sexual harassment and attacks on behalf of their employees common law principles must permit the assessment of responsibility on those most able to supervise and prevent such activities. Although Texas Supreme Court has not had occasion to rule directly on the question of course and scope as it applies to sexual assault (the Court of Appeals declined to certify this question), two Texas lower courts have held without exception that such cases present a question of fact for the jury.

In Bushell v. Dean, 781 S.W.2d 652, 658-59 (Tex. App.--Austin, 1989, rev'd on other grounds 803 S.W.2d 711 (Tex. 1990)), after reiterating a number of acts of sexual harassment by Bushell toward his co-employee Mary Dean, the court concluded, "the jury could well have concluded that many of the acts which occurred before Dean rejected Bushell were within his authority." 781 S.W.2d at 659. In Nagel Mfg. & Supply Co. v. Ulloa, 812 S.W.2d 78, 81-82 (Tex. App.--Austin, 1991, no writ) a fellow employee was also found by a jury to have engaged in sexual harassment which was defined by the court for the jury as "unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, sexual abuse or vulgar language, or other verbal, visual or physical conduct." 812 S.W.2d at 80. The court upheld an award of damages and punitive damages as being proximately caused by and within the course and scope of employment of the plaintiff's supervisor. 812 S.W.2d at 82. Officer Taylor had sexually harassed and assaulted three other women (two with the direct knowledge of his police chief) prior to his attack on McLaren, and those attacks had gone unpunished. Despite Texas authority holding that such evidence can, in of itself, constitute the implicit authority of one's employer to engage in that type of activity, Country Roads, Inc. v. Witt, 737 S.W.2d 362 (Tex. App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 1987, no writ)), the Court of Appeals disregarded this case law entirely not even attempting to distinguish it, and held as a matter of law that no such attack can ever be within the course and scope of employment. The Court of Appeals also ignored the long held Texas "dual purpose" doctrine applicable to respondeat superior:

> Conduct may be within the scope of employment, although done in part to serve the purposes of the servant or a third person. The fact that the preponderant motive of the servant is to benefit himself or a third person does not prevent the act from being within the scope of employment. (emphasis added).

Best Steel Buildings, Inc. v. Harden, 553 S.W.2d 122, 128 (Tex. Civ. App.--Tyler, 1977, writ ref'd n.r.e.); Howard v. American Paper Stock Company, 523 S.W.2d 744, 747 (Tex. Civ. App.--Fort Worth, 1975, writ ref'd and aff'd on other grounds 528 S.W.2d 576 (Tex. 1975)). To allow the Court of Appeals to ignore the obvious, recent lower court decisions (Bushell v. Dean, was actually before the Supreme Court and reversed only on evidentiary rulings that assisted the Plaintiff) and find, as a matter of law, no such right to have a jury test this question of respondeat superior is to encourage the forum shopping and inequitable administration of the law that the Erie doctrine has sought to avoid. Hanna v. Plumer, 380 US 460, 468 (1965).

The panel opinion is also contrary to this Court's teaching in Meritor Savings, supra. The federal courts have not hesitated to find respondeat superior under Texas law with regard to assaultive conduct not aimed at women. Wallsteen v. Int'l Bank of Commerce, 770 F.Supp. 1164 (S.D. Tex. 1991); Sauls v. Union Oil Co. of Cal., 750 F.Supp. 783 (E.D. Tex. 1990). The finding, as a matter of law, that sexual assault, as opposed to other types of assault, can never be within the course and scope of an employee's employment works particularly invidious discrimination upon those who are the targets of these attacks. See Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228 (1979).

II. HAVING TWICE DETERMINED THAT THE INSURANCE CONTRACT AT ISSUE WAS AMBIGUOUS, THE COURT OF APPEALS DISREGARDED CLEAR, UNEQUIVOCAL AND UNANIMOUS TEXAS SUPREME COURT DECISIONS REQUIRING AMBIGUOUS INSURANCE CONTRACTS BE CONSTRUED AGAINST THE INSURER AND HELD THAT THE AMBIGUOUS INSURANCE CONTRACTS BE CONSTRUED IN FAVOR OF THE INSURER, A DETERMINATION CONTRARY TO THE RULES OF DECISION ACT 28 U.S.C. § 1652; AND THE TEACHING OF ERIE V. TOMPKINS, 304 US 64 (1938) AND HANNA V. PLUMER, 380 US 460 (1965).

In both opinions by the panel of the Fifth Circuit, the Court decided that the language of the insurance policy at issue is ambiguous [Opinion of April 9, 1992 pp. 9 and 10 (Appendix A); Opinion of July 6, 1992, pp. 5 and 6 (Appendix B)]. In its opinion on rehearing the Court of Appeals stated "therefore despite the existence of ambiguities in the policy's wording, we cannot automatically construe that policy against the insurer when, as here, we find the ambiguous wording does have a defined meaning in law." This is undeniably an incorrect statement of Texas law. The case cited by the panel, Security Mutual Casualty Co. v. Johnson, 584 S.W.2d 703, 704 (Tex. 1979) as authority for that statement is a case where the insurance contract was held to be unambiguous ("the majority finds the term unambiguous . . . " 584 S.W.2d at 704). The Texas special rules of construction are applicable to ambiguous insurance contracts and should have been applied to this case. These rules of construction have been applied in favor of coverage and against the insurer in every case where the court determines that the insurance contract at issue is ambiguous despite the fact that the terms themselves may have clearly defined meanings. Balderama v. Western Cas. Life Ins. Co., 825 S.W.2d 432 (Tex. 1991); Barnett v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 723 S.W.2d 663 (Tex. 1987), ("As pointed out by Aetna, however, if the insurance contract is expressed in plain and unambiguous language a court cannot resort to the various rules of construction . . . . Although we agree that the language used is definite, the meaning and scope of the language is ambiguous. It has long been the law in this state that when language in a policy is susceptible to more than one reasonable construction, it is patently ambiguous . . . . We must resort to rules of construction. . ." 723 S.W.2d at 665, 666); Glover v. National Ins. Underwriters, 545 S.W.2d 755 (Tex. 1977) (" . . . we must adopt the construction of an exclusionary clause urged by the insured as long as that construction is not itself unreasonable, even if the construction urged by the insurer appears to be more reasonable or a more accurate reflection of the parties' intent . . ." 545 S.W.2d at 761); Ramsay v. Maryland General Ins. Co., 533 S.W.2d 344 (Tex. 1976) ("We have concluded that both parties have offered reasonable, although conflicting, interpretations of the meaning of "commercial automobile" as applied to the facts and circumstances of this case . . . . When the language of a policy is susceptible of more than one reasonable construction, the courts will apply the construction which favors the insured and permit recovery . . .," 533 S.W.2d at 349); Kelly Associates v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 681 S.W.2d 593, 596 (Tex. 1984). As recently as 1990, the Fifth Circuit in National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Kasler Corp., 906 F.2d 196 (5th Cir. 1990) held

> Further where a policy is susceptible to more than one reasonable interpretation, "Texas courts apply the construction which favors the insured and permits recovery . . ." Trammell Crow, 854 F.2d at 99 (citing Ramsay, 533 S.W.2d at 349); accord Glover v. National Ins. Underwriters, 45 S.W.2d 755, 761 (Tex. 1977).
> Significantly, "[T]hese special rules favoring the insured are only applicable where there is an ambiguity in the policy; . . . 906 F.2d at 198.

The panel however, in its motion for rehearing ignores the special rules of construction and in so doing defiantly refuses to follow the teaching of Erie v. Tompkins, supra, and Hanna v. Plumer, supra. There would appear to be no clearer illustration of the egregious departure by a lower court from its clear duty to interpret and apply the Erie doctrine so as to call for an exercise of this court's power of supervision.

III. THE COURT OF APPEALS' FAILURE TO DEFER TO THE TEXAS SUPREME COURT BY CERTIFICATION OF THE QUESTION OF COURSE AND SCOPE, INTERPRETATION OF AN AMBIGUOUS INSURANCE CONTRACT, DUTY TO DEFEND, AND STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS IS VIOLATIVE OF TEACHING OF LEHMAN BROTHERS V. SCHEIN, 416 US 386 (1974).

In Lehman Brothers v. Schein, 416 US 386 (1974) this court held that "it would seem particularly appropriate in view of the novelty of the question and the great unsettlement . . . " of the law of a sister state that the federal court should take advantage of that state's certification procedure to certify an unsettled question to the state supreme court for a determination. 416 US at 391. Roberta McLaren asked the Court of Appeals to do just that following its sudden and unexpected reversal of its original opinion. The Court has never ruled on McLaren's motion. The Petitioner requests that the Court on the same considerations expressed in Lehman remand this matter for a determination on whether or not certification to the Texas Supreme Court would be advisable in light of lower court opinions clearly granting the right of jury trial on the question of course and scope and sexual harassment and assault cases. At a time when issues of sexual harassment in the workplace and unfortunately by persons in authority such as police officers (See dissenting opinion, Mary M v. City of Los Angeles, 266 Cal. Rptr. 487 (Cal. Ct. App. 1988)) are receiving much deserved attention deference to the state Supreme Court to allow it to formulate and develop its common law would be the proper course for novel and unique questions such as that at bar.

IV. THE COURT OF APPEALS APPLICATION OF TEXAS SUPREME COURTS' DECISIONAL LAW CHANGING THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS IN INSURANCE BAD FAITH CASES OPERATES TO DENY PETITIONER DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

At the time of the accrual of this action, the Texas Supreme Court had held in Arnold v. Nat'l Co. Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 725 S.W.2d 165, 168 (Tex. 1987) held that in actions for bad faith filed against an insurance company the applicable two-year statute of limitations (Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 16.003(a)) did not begin to run until the underlying cause of action is concluded. 725 S.W.2d at 168. Judgment was rendered against Officer Taylor, June 26, 1989. (R. 579) Suit was commenced against Imperial Casualty & Indemnity Co. on May 15, 1990 (R. 10), clearly within the two-year statute of limitations. In Murray v. San Jacinto Agency, Inc., 800 S.W.2d 826 (Tex. 1990), decided April 18, 1990, the Texas Supreme Court reversed Arnold and held such causes of action commenced on the date of denial of insurance benefits, an event that occurred prior to McLaren filing her original lawsuit. The Court of Appeals applied Murray retroactively eliminating McLaren's bad faith actions. Retroactive application of such judicial change via case law which works an "injustice or hardship" is violative of this Court's rules on retroactivity. Cipriano v. Houma, 395 US 701 (1969); James B. Beam Distilling Company v. Georgia, 115 L.Ed.2d 481 (1991).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Petitioner prays that writ of certiorari issue to review the July 6, 1992 judgment and opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Plaintiff-Appellant Roberta McLaren--paradoxically both the assignee of a police officer insured under a law enforcement insurance policy issued by Defendant-Appellee Imperial Casualty & Indemnity Company, and the victim of the insured officer's admittedly wrongful acts--appeals the district court's holding that the policy does not cover such acts of the insured against McLaren. Finding the insurance policy ambiguous, we construe the policy against the insurer and reverse.

FACTS

On the night of April 22, 1985, after having dinner and drinks with friends at a restaurant in Hurst, Texas, determined that this opinion should not be published.

McLaren was driving on a freeway in Bedford, Texas, on her way home to Euless, Texas, when she observed flashing police lights in her rear-view mirror. She pulled her car over and stopped on the side of the road. Larry Taylor, a uniformed Bedford police officer, got out of the squad car and approached McLaren's car. He asked her to step out of her car, informing her that he had stopped her for "riding the white line." After inspecting McLaren's drivers license, Officer Taylor administered a field sobriety test, which McLaren passed. Officer Taylor then issued McLaren a citation for not having proof of liability insurance and instructed McLaren to follow him in her car.

McLaren, who thought that she had been arrested and was being led to the police station, dutifully followed Taylor. Instead of continuing to the station, however, Officer Taylor turned into an empty parking lot in a deserted area. Officer Taylor remained in his squad car, with the lights flashing and the police radio functioning, and instructed McLaren to get out of her car and into the front seat of the squad car. When she complied, Taylor ordered McLaren to disrobe partially, complimented her physical attributes, and instructed her to perform fellatio. After the act was completed, Officer Taylor changed McLaren's citation, "whiting out" the proof of insurance charge and substituting a charge of driving without a license. Taylor informed McLaren that the new charge would be dismissed when she showed the judge her license. Taylor allowed McLaren to get out of the squad car but told her to wait until he had left before leaving the parking lot. McLaren reported the incident later that night and the Bedford Police Department began an investigation. Ultimately, Taylor was dismissed from the police force and charged with the crime of sexual assault, to which he pled guilty.

The City of Bedford carried a "Law Enforcement Professional Liability Insurance" policy (the "policy") issued by Imperial Casualty & Indemnity Company ("Imperial"). Special Risks, Inc. ("Special Risks") served as the managing general agent for Imperial on that policy. Pursuant to the policy, Imperial promised, inter alia, to pay on behalf of the City of Bedford and its police officers all "damages for personal injuries" caused by "wrongful acts arising out of the Law Enforcement activities." The policy defined a "wrongful act" as:

> Actual or alleged error, misstatement or misleading statement, omission, neglect or breach of duty by the Insured individual or collectively, while acting or failing to act within the scope of his employment or official duties pertaining to the law enforcement functions of the Insured (emphasis added).

The policy defined "personal injury" to include several acts, but provided that "no act shall be deemed to be or result in personal injury unless committed in the regular course of duty by the Insured."

McLaren filed suit against Taylor and the City of Bedford in Texas state court on April 22, 1987. Imperial denied coverage under the policy and refused to defend Taylor. McLaren settled with the City and obtained a judgment against Taylor on June 26, 1989 for $7,018,045 after he failed to appear to contest the matter. In February 1990, Taylor assigned to McLaren any rights he might have against Imperial under the policy in exchange for a release from liability. On May 15, 1990, McLaren, as Taylor's assignee, filed suit in Texas state court against Imperial and Special Risks, seeking to recover the amount of the judgment against Taylor as well as damages resulting from Imperial's refusal to defend Taylor. The defendants removed that action to the federal district court. Each party moved for summary judgment; the district court granted the motions of Imperial and Special Risks but denied McLaren's motion. The district court held as a matter of law that (1) the policy did not cover Taylor's conduct; (2) Imperial owed no duty to defend Taylor for such conduct; (3) Taylor suffered no damage as a result of Imperial's refusal to defend; and (4) all of McLaren's claims other than recovery from Imperial under the policy were barred by a two-year statute of limitations. McLaren appeals the district court's judgment on several grounds, attacking primarily the holding that the policy did not cover Taylor's conduct.

ANALYSIS

This court reviews the grant of summary judgment de novo, using the same criteria as the district court and reviewing all facts and inferences to be drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.[1]

A. Coverage under the policy for Officer Taylor's acts

The district court, and the parties in their arguments, relied on cases discussing the doctrine of respondeat superior in determining whether Officer Taylor's actions against McLaren were covered by the policy. Although we recognize the similarity between the "scope of employment" and "arising out of Law Enforcement activities" language of the policy on the one hand, and the test for determining whether an employer is vicariously liable for the actions of his employee in tort cases on the other, we emphasize at the outset that this is not a tort case to which the doctrine of respondeat superior applies. Neither is it a civil rights case for infliction of a constitutional tort cognizable under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Rather, this case turns strictly on the proper interpretation of an insurance contract. Consequently, cases discussing "course and scope of employment" in the context of respondeat superior have only instructional value. The same is true for excessive force cases under § 1983.

Preliminarily, there are two possible approaches to analyzing Officer Taylor's actions under the language of the subject insurance policy. The narro w approach would focus solely on the act of which McLaren complains--that of Officer Taylor in forcing her to perform fellatio. The broad approach would consider that act in the context of an entire, uninterrupted series of acts that began when Taylor stopped McLaren for apparently driving while intoxicated, and ended when Taylor got off duty at the end of his watch. We find the first approach to be prohibitively narrow. Clearly, forcing someone to perform fellatio is both an intentional tort and a crime, and in the abstract sense can never fall within a policeman's scope of employment or official law enforcement duties. But in this case we cannot examine that act in a vacuum; rather, we must put it in its proper context by considering the unbroken flow of circumstances and event s occurring before, during, and after the commission of that act.

When Officer Taylor stopped McLaren on the freeway, he was on duty, dressed in full uniform, armed, and driving a clearly identifiable police squad car. Consistent with his authority as a polic e officer and the functions for which he was on duty at the time, he administered a field sobriety test to McLaren, asked her to produce proof of liability insurance, and issued a citation when she could not produce such proof. Taylor's instruction to McLaren to follow him in her car was not inconsistent with traffic arrest procedures, and McLaren was reasonable in believing that she was being led to the station for booking and was thus obeying a lawful order. Likewise, Taylor's order, issued after arriving at the parking lot, for McLaren to leave her car and enter the squad car, was not inconsistent with traffic arrest procedures and, again, she was reasonable in complying, still believing that she was in his custody and not free to disobey his orders. Most significantly to the instant analysis, during the time between McLaren's entry of the squad car until Taylor drove away, he never turned off the squad car's flashing lights or radio and never reported to his dispatcher that he was temporarily off duty or out of communication. Our point is that even during the illicit sex act Taylor was simultaneously on duty--he never stopped his "law enforcement activities." Even before McLaren got out of the squad car, Taylor acted in his official capacity by changing McLaren's citation and instructing her as to the proper manner of settling it. Throughout the entire series of events, Officer Taylor acted with either actual or apparent authority. McLaren reasonably believed that she was required to comply with his orders--and even her obedience to Taylor's illicit orders resulted from duress, intimidation and fear of the accoutrements of police authority, including Taylor's service weapon which, stated McLaren, he repeatedly touched as if to emphasize its presence.

We recognize that generally there are two distinct situations in which a police officer can act outside the scope of his authority. One is by exceeding the reasonable limits of an authorized act or function; the other is by turning aside to do a clearly unrelated act. Examples of the first situation are found in cases involving the use of force. An officer is authorized to use force in certain circumstances, such as making arrest or quelling disturbances, but the degree of force that an officer may use in those circumstances is limited, and an officer exceeds his authority when he exceeds those limits. The other situation is seen in the example of an officer who clearly stops performing his official duties and goes off on an uncomprehended personal lark, such as when an officer signs off the air, takes off his tie and tunic, goes into a bar for a few belts, and ends up in a brawl that results in personal injuries and property damage.

But the facts of the instant case do not fall into either situation. Taylor neither performed a lawful act to excess nor went off duty even temporarily. His misconduct occurred contemporaneously with the continuous performance of his law enforcement duties. The question presented in the instant case is not whether the insurance policy covers only the first type of unauthorized conduct (negligently or intentionally exceeding the limits of authorized conduct) and excludes personal larks by police officers, or covers even those unauthorized activities that are merely brief and unexpected deviations from a continuing course of action which is otherwise wholly consistent with law enforcement authority. The question here is whether the subject insurance policy covers an obviously unauthorized and illegal act that is unquestionably a breach of the officer's duty but which occurs, as here, simultaneously with and during the uninterrupted course of his regular duty.

To answer that question, we must begin with an analysis of the language of the policy. By its terms, the policy covers "wrongful acts arising out of Law Enforcement activities." The policy defines such wrongful acts as actions committed by an officer "within the scope of his employment or official duties pertaining to [his] law enforcement functions." To qualify for coverage, the injury must be caused by the actions of an insured "committed in the regular course of duty."

Under Texas law, a contract is ambiguous if it is reasonably susceptibl e to more than one meaning after applying established rules of construction.[2] One reasonable reading of the policy in this case--and possibly even the best reading--is that a forced sexual act such as that committed by Officer Taylor in and of itself is not within the scope of his employment or official duties. It is axiomatic that the duties of a law enforcement officer never include sexual favors obtained by force, duress, coercion, trickery or the like.

But that is not the only reasonable reading of the policy. It is also reasonable to read the policy to protect the insureds from liability for damages resulting from such an act when, as here, it is committed simultaneously with and during the offending officer's unbroken series of acts all of which are performed in the regular course of his duty. As noted, Taylor never stopped performing his regular "on call" patrol duties. His radio was never off; he never "signed off;" he never left his squad car; he was never even out of uniform. A reasonable alternative reading of the wording of the policy is that the incident arose out of Taylor's law enforcement activities and that he committed that act in the regular course of duty, which continued without interruption throughout the short, sordi d affair. In fact, but for the exercise of his duty, Officer Taylor would not have been in a position to commit the offense against Ms. McLaren, so that a reasonable interpretation is that the offense against McLaren undeniably arose out of law enforcement activities. Although the policy covers only personal injury "committed in the regular course of duty of the insured," that too is susceptible of a temporal reading; and as we have noted, the act occurred at a time when Taylor was on duty, i.e., during his regular course of duty.

As we find the wording of the polic y susceptible of at least two reasonable interpretations, we conclude that the policy is ambiguous. Texas law is well-settled that when an insurance policy is ambiguous, it is to be construed strictly against the insurer and liberally in favor of the insured.[3] Following that rule, we hold that the policy covers the offending acts committed by Officer Taylor that caused that damages suffered by McLaren. Therefore, in our plenary review, we disagree with the district court's grant of Imperial's motion for summary judgment and denial of that filed by McLaren. We hold that Imperial's motion for summary judgment must be denied and McLaren's must be granted.

[3]Barnett v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 723 S.W.2d 663, 666 (Tex. 1987).

B. Duty to defend

In her motion for summary judgment, McLaren asserted that Imperial and Special Risks had breached their duty to defend Taylor in McLaren's state court suit against him for damages. The polic y provided that Imperial would defend "any claim or suit against the insured seeking damages on account of such wrongful acts, even if the allegations of the claim or suit are groundless, false or fraudulent . . . ." The district court denied McLaren's motion and granted Imperial's and Special Risks' motions for summary judgment on this issue. In so doing, the district court held that Imperial and Special Risks had no duty to defend Taylor because the conduct alleged by McLaren against Taylor was not within the coverage of the policy as a matter of law. As an alternative ground, the district court held that McLaren had failed to raise any material fact issue that Taylor had been damaged by Imperial's and Special Risks' refusal to defend. Because Taylor's alleged conduct was not covered by the policy, the court held, the only possible damage resulting from the failure to defend would have been any legal expenses that Taylor had incurred in defending the suit. And, as Taylor did not attempt to defend the suit, there was no evidence of any such damages.

With respect to Imperial, our holding that the policy covered Officer Taylor's actions renders those issues moot. Were we to hold that Imperial had a duty to defend Taylor and breached that duty, and that its breach caused Taylor to suffer a judgment, McLaren still would be entitled to recover only the limit of the coverage under the policy. As she is entitled to recover that amount by virtu e of our holding today, we need not and do not address the issue of Imperial's failure to defend.

McLaren has produced no summary judgment proof sufficient to raise a question of fact regarding the existence of an obligation by Special Risks, under the policy or otherwise, to defend Officer Taylor against McLaren's claims. Thus, the district court did not err in granting Special Risks' motion for summary judgment on that issue.

C. Statute of limitations

In addition to the claims discussed above, McLaren brought claims against Imperial and Special Risks for (1) breach of a duty of good faith and fair dealing; (2) false, misleading and deceptive acts and practices under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act; and (3) violations of Tex. Ins. Code art. 21.21 (collectively, the "bad faith" claims). In their motions for summary judgment, Imperial and Special Risks argued that applicable statutes of limitations barred all of McLaren's claims. The district court held that it need not discuss that argument because summary judgment was proper on other grounds, but that, if limitations had been the sole ground for the defendants' motions for summary judgment, all of McLaren's claims other than her claim against Imperial for payment under the policy would have been barred by limitations. We agree.

McLaren filed her state court suit against Taylor on April 22, 1987. On July 15, 1987, Imperial notified Taylor in writing that it was denying coverage and that it would not defend Taylor. The state court rendered judgment against Taylor on June 26, 1989. McLaren filed the instant action on may 15, 1990. All parties concede that McLaren's claim for payment under the policy is governed by a four-year statute of limitations and thus is not time-barred. McLaren argues that the same four-year limitations period controls her claims against Imperial and Special Risks for failure to defend Taylor. As we hold that claim to be moot, we do not address this contention.

McLaren concedes that her bad faith claims have limitations periods of only two years. She argues, however, that she brought those causes of actions timely because they did not accrue until the state court rendered judgment against Taylor on June 26, 1989. McLaren asserts that this action is a Stowers[4] third party action, and that, in such a case, the injury-producing event which starts the running of the limitations period is the rendering of a judgment in excess of the policy limits.

We disagree with McLaren's classification of this action. In Murray v. San Jacinto Agency, Inc.,[5] an insurance company initially denied coverage, then changed its position six months later and admitted coverage. The insured brought suit against the insurance company, alleging negligent denial of coverage and a breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing. The suit was filed and citation was served more than two years after the initial denial of coverage, but less than two years after the admission of coverage. The Texas Supreme Court held that the insured's cause of action accrued and limitations began to run not on the date that the insurance company subsequently admitted coverage but when the company wrongfully denied coverage, as that was when the wrongful act effected an injury.[6] The court noted that "a cause of action generally accrues at the time when facts come into existence which authorize a claimant to seek a judicial remedy." The court distinguished between third party Stowers cases and first party cases:

> The injury producing event in a Stowers third party case is not the same as it is in a first party case. A Stowers third party claim accrues when the insurer unreasonably fails to settle a claim against the insured within policy limits. The injury producing event is the underlying judgment in excess of policy limits. A first party claim, such as . . . this case, accrues when an insurer unreasonably fails to pay an insured under the policy. The injury producing event is the denial of coverage. Limitations on a first party claim appropriately begins to run at denial, not the date a separate suit to determine coverage under the contract is resolved.[7]

The instant case, like Murray, is a first

party case. McLaren brought this action as Taylor's assignee, so her cause of action was governed by the limitations period applicable to Taylor. Taylor suffered an injury and could have sought a judicial remedy when Imperial wrongfully denied coverage on July 15, 1987. Thus, limitations began to run on that date and, as McLaren brought the instant action more than two years later , her bad faith claims are barred.

III.

CONCLUSION

Finding the insurance policy ambiguous, we must construe it strictly against Imperial and find coverage of Officer Taylor's wrongful acts. We therefore REVERSE the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of Imperial and its denial of McLaren's motion for summary judgment against Imperial; RENDER summary judgment in favor of McLaren against Imperial to the full extent of its policy limits and related provisions; and REMAND to the district court for the sole purpose of determining the specific amount of the judgment against Imperial and in favor of McLaren, including interest and costs, if any. In all other respects, however, we AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

E. GRADY JOLLY, Circuit Judge, dissenting in part:

I respectfully dissent. The majority bases its reversal on an "ambiguity" in the policy. There is no ambiguity: the majority simply fails to read and apply all of the policy's terms consistent with their ordinary usage.

There is but one reasonable and common sense interpretation of this policy: Rape by a policeman is not an act done within the scope of his employment, nor done within the scope of an official duty, nor done in the regular course of a policeman's duty. Indeed, I do not know how the policy could be clearer in its language to exclude an intentional tort and crime committed for the sole purpose of the employee's personal gratification. Because coverage clearly does not extend to Taylor's acts, I would affirm the district court's judgment.

The majority admits that "forcing someone to perform fellatio is both an intentional tort and a crime" "and in the abstract sense can never fall within a policeman's scope of employment or official law enforcement duties."[1] Slip op. at 6. But the majority poses the question in this case as "whether the subject insurance policy covers an obviously unauthorized and illegal act that is unquestionably a breach of the officer's duty but which occurs, as here, simultaneously with and during the uninterrupted course of his regular duty."[2] Answering "yes," the majority's theory is simply this: Because "but for the exercise of his duty, [Taylor] would not have been in a position to commit the offense," that rape "arose out of Taylor's law enforcement activities" and because he raped McLaren during the time he was on duty, "he committed that act in the regular course of duty which continued without interruption throughout the short, sordid affair." Slip op. at 10. To say this requires the same kind of mind stretch that is required to conclude that an on-duty security officer who robs a bank at gunpoint is acting in the regular course of his duty because he never turned off his radio, took off his "tunic and tie," nor officially signed off the clock for the interim of the robbery. "His misconduct occurred contemporaneously with the continuous performance of his law enforcement duties." Slip op. at 8. Applying the majority's reasoning, one must conclude that such a bank robbery "arose from the law enforcement activities" because "but for" those activities, the security officer would not have been on the premises, nor have had the gun, nor have been able generally to employ the modus operandi of the robbery. This kind of word play, indulged in by the majority without citation of authority whatsoever, is best left for the postulations of a college semantics or rhetoric class and should be eschewed by a court of law.

[1]In the "abstract" sense, indeed! In the realistic sense, fellatio could never "fall within a policeman's scope of employment or official law enforcement duties."

[2]It is impossible to accept the factual premise of the question posed unless one can believe that it was part of Taylor's "regular duty" to deceive McLaren into following him to the vacant parking lot and engaging in rape; otherwise, his "regular duty was interrupted when he set out on his plan to engage in rape.

The majority would have been better served by a straightforward application of the policy's terms in keeping with their ordinary meaning. Imperial's policy specifically covers "all sums which the Insured shall become legally obligated to pay as damages because of wrongful acts arising out of Law Enforcement activities." [Emphasis mine.] The policy defines "wrongful act" to mean "only or all of the following: Actual or alleged error, misstatement or misleading statement, omission, neglect or breach of duty by the Insured individual or collectively, while acting or failing to act within the scope of his employment or official duties pertaining to the law enforcement functions of the Insured." [Emphasis mine.] In defining "personal injury," the policy states that "no act shall be deemed to be or result in personal injury unless committed in the regular course of duty by the insured." "Insured" is defined to include "all paid full or part time employees." Transposing these words to the facts of this case results in coverage as follows:

> The insurance company will pay all sums which Taylor shall become legally obligated to pay as damages, caused in the regular course of Taylor's duty by Taylor's acts, which are within the scope of his employment or within his official duties, if such employment and duties pertain to the law enforcement functions of the city of Bedford, Texas, and if Taylor's acts arise out of Law Enforcement activities.

Instead of considering the policy language in its entirety to determine coverage, the majority picks and chooses, focusing primarily on the phrase "committed in the regular course of duty," with support from the phrase, "arising out of law enforcement activities." However, although the damages must be caused "in (not during) the regular course of duty," and must "arise from law enforcement activities," the policy clearly states that Taylor is covered only for acts that, additionally,: 1) are within the scope of his employment, or his official duty and 2) pertain to law enforcement functions.

The majority's failure to take into account the entirety of the coverage language is understandable: it could not possibly conclude that Taylor's acts were within the scope of law enforcement employment or within official police duties. The majority, in fact, acknowledges: "It is axiomatic that the duties of a law enforcement officer never include sexual favors obtained by force, duress, coercion, trickery or the like." Slip op. at 9. Yet the majority blithely ignores this axiom by finding McLaren's injury "qualif[ied] for coverage" because it "was caused by the actions of an insured 'committed in the regular course of duty.'" Slip op. at 9. The policy wording, "committed in the regular course of duty," cannot be fairly interpreted to be read synonymously with during the regular course of duty; "in" refers to place, as "within" the perimeter of a policeman's duties; "during" refers to time, as "while" on duty. Hence, the policy phrase clearly cannot be given the "temporal" meaning (slip op. at 10) the majority attaches to it.

To reiterate: the phrase "regular course of duty," moreover, is not the sole wording determining coverage: coverage exists only when acts are also "in the scope of . . . employment or official duties." Of course, no one--not even the majority--contends that rape is "in the scope of . . . employment or official duties." Neither did the rape "pertain[] to the law enforcement functions" of Taylor or the city of Bedford. To quote the majority again: "It is axiomatic that the duties of a law enforcement officer never include sexual favors obtained by force, duress, coercion, trickery or the like." Slip op. at 9. Although this "law enforcemen t function" requirement, as well as the "scope of employment" and "official duties" requirements, are ignored by the majority, each of these requirements for coverage was written into the policy and none of them was met.

Finally, the majority errs in a major way in reasoning that because Taylor would not have been in a position to commit this assault "but for" the fact that he was a policeman, McLaren's rape "arose from" law enforcement activities. Completely transforming the "arising from" language into the much broader and more attenuated "but for" causation analysis is done without citation of authority. Such a construction of the policy is a plain distortion of its terms.

Apart from failing to apply the plain terms of the policy, the majority further errs when it dismisses "cases discussing 'course and scope of employment' in the context of respondeat superior" and "excessive force cases under § 1983" as having "only instructional value." In all but closing its eyes to these cases, the majority thus tries to avoid the ultimate question of how a planned rape, serving only the officer's personal gratification, is within the scope of his employment or "official duty." The majority, hanging onto the "in the course of regular duty" phrase, can only respond: "Well, because of the time the rape occurred--a time when the officer was on the clock and a time right after he had performed an official duty, i.e., a traffic citation." No authority for this ill-considered reasoning is cited. Consequently, it seems to me that in view of the fact that the policy extends coverage only to acts "within the scope of [Taylor's] employment or official duties," such cases have not only "instructional value " but that when they are from our Circuit, they are persuasive precedent. See, e.g., City of Green Cove Springs v. Donaldson, 348 F.2d 197, 202 (5th Cir.

1965) (applying Florida law, court held that uniformed officer's rape of woman after traffic stop was outside scope of employment). Moreover, Texas courts hold that:

> To be within the scope of employment 'the conduct must be of the same general nature as that authorized or incidental to the conduct authorized. [Citation omitted] . . . . [W]here the act of the servant is not in the furtherance of the master's business, or for the accomplishment of the object for which he was employed, but is performed . . . in the furtherance of personal animosities of the servant, the master is not liable.

Smith v. M Systems Food Stores, 156 Tex. 484, 297 S.W.2d 112, 114 (1957). Imperial's policy extends no coverage to an act outside Taylor's scope of employment. Thus, our determination in this case should be bound by Smith v. M Systems, which gives an authoritative definition to the so-called "ambiguous" terms of the coverage.

In closing, I turn to address one final point: The majority holds that McLaren is entitled to recover "the limit of coverage under the policy." After Imperial denied coverage, Taylor made no effort to defend himself and, without protest, allowed a $7 million default judgment to be taken against him. McLaren then released him from all liability to her in return for an assignment to her of his rights under the policy. The arrangement between Taylor and McLaren has an appearance of collusion. This Court should not sanction an appearance of such impropriety. At the least, we should require that McLaren prove her damages before she collects. In this case, there was no judicial determination for the underlying facts and damages involved in McLaren's claim against Taylor; Taylor simply defaulted and then assigned his rights as an insured to McLaren. To hold Imperial to a "determination" which, in reality, was not a determination at all, but simply a demand by an adversary, does not even mimic fairness.

In closing, let me say that I can well understand the majority's sympathy for Ms. McLaren. She has indeed been done a terrible, terrible wrong. But it was a detestable crime perpetrated by Taylor solely and only in his personal interests. It was an act plainly not covered under this insurance policy. This defendant is not liable and we should not say it is. One wrong is enough.

I respectfully dissent.[3]

[3]As should be clear, my dissent is limited to Part II A of the majority's opinion. I concur in the remainder thereof.

Plaintiff-Appellant Roberta McLaren--paradoxically both the assignee of a police officer insured under a law enforcement insurance policy issued by Defendant-Appellee Imperial Casualty & Indemnity Company, and the victim of the insured officer's admittedly wrongful acts--appeals the district court's holding that the policy does not cover such acts of the insured against McLaren. the district court correctly interpreted the insurance policy and therefore affirm.

I.

FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

A. Facts

The operative facts of this case are set forth in detail in our opinion on initial hearing and are incorporated herein by reference. They do not, therefore, bear repeating in such an extensive form here, so we state the facts in an abbreviated form only.

McLaren was driving on a freeway in Bedford, Texas, around midnight when she was pulled over by Larry Taylor, a uniformed Bedford police officer. After inspecting McLaren's drivers license, Officer Taylor administered a field sobriety test, which McLaren passed.

Taylor then issued McLaren a citation for not having proof of liability insurance. He then instructed Mclaren to follow him in her car, which she did. Instead of proceeding to the police station, however, Officer Taylor turned into an empty parking lot in a deserted area. He remained in uniform in his squad car, with the lights flashing and the police radio functioning, and instructed McLaren to get out of her car and into the front seat of the squad car. When she complied, Taylor ordered McLaren to disrobe partially and then to perform fellatio.

McLaren reported the incident later that night. After the Bedford Police Department investigated the incident, Taylor was dismissed from the police force and charged with the crime of sexual assault, to which he pled guilty.

The City of Bedford carried a "Law Enforcement Professional Liability Insurance" policy (the "policy") issued by Imperial Casualty & Indemnity Company ("Imperial"). Special Risks, Inc. ("Special Risks") served as the managing general agent for Imperial on that policy. pursuant to the policy, Imperial promised, inter alia, to pay on behalf of the City of Bedford and its police officers all "damages for personal injuries" caused by "wrongful acts arising out of Law Enforcement activities." The policy defined a "wrongful act" as:

> Actual or alleged error, misstatement or misleading statement, omission, neglect or breach of duty by the Insured individual or collectively, while acting or failing to act within the scope of his employment or official duties

> pertaining to the law enforcement functions of the Insured (emphasis added).

The policy defined "personal injury" to include several acts, including assault and battery, but provided that "no act shall be deemed to be or result in personal injury unless committed in the regular course of duty by the Insured."

B. Proceedings

McLaren filed suit against Taylor and the city of Bedford in Texas state court. Imperial denied coverage under the policy and refused to defend Taylor. McLaren settled with the City, then obtained a $7,018,045 judgment against Taylor after he failed to appear to contest the matter. Over six months later, Taylor assigned to McLaren any policy rights he might have against Imperial in exchange for a release from liability under McLaren's judgment. Thereafter, McLaren, as Taylor's assignee, filed suit in Texas state court against Imperial and Special Risks, seeking to recover the amount of her judgment against Taylor as well as damages resulting from Imperial's refusal to defend Taylor. The defendants removed that action to the federal district court. Each party moved for summary judgment; the district court granted the motions of Imperial and Special Risks and denied McLaren's motion. The district court held as a matter of law that (1) the policy did not cover Taylor's conduct; (2) Imperial owed no duty to defend Taylor for such conduct; alternatively, (3) Taylor suffered no damage as a result of Imperial's refusal to defend; and (4) all of McLaren's claims other than recovery from Imperial under the policy were barred by a two-year statute of limitations. McLaren appeals the district court's judgment on several grounds, attacking primarily the holding that the policy did not cover Taylor's conduct.

II.

A. Standard of Review

This court reviews the grant of summary judgment de novo, using the same criteria as the district court and viewing all facts and inferences to be drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.[1]

B. Coverage under the policy for Officer Taylor's acts

On rehearing, we begin as we did originally with an analysis of the language of the policy. Key to any such analysis is vigilance for ambiguity, for in Texas as elsewhere ambiguous provision in insurance policies are construed against the insurer which drafts them.[2] By its terms, the instant policy covers "wrongful acts arising out of Law Enforcement activities." The policy defines such wrongful acts as actions committed by an officer "within the scope of his employment or official duties pertaining to [his] law enforcement functions." To qualify for coverage, the injury must be caused by the actions of an insured "committed in the regular course of duty."

[2] See, e.g., Barnett v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 723 S.W.2d 663, 666 (Tex. 1987).

We remain convinced that, at least in the abstract, the policy language is ambiguous: it is susceptible of at least two interpretations. On the one hand, the language could mean that coverage is narrowly restricted to official law enforcement activities; on the other hand, the wording could be read more broadly as extending coverage to all acts that occur within an uninterrupted serie s of law enforcement activity.[3]

The dispute in this case centers on the ambiguous terms "within the scope of employment or official duties" and "in the regular course of duty." Where we went awry in our original opinion was in stopping at the point of finding ambiguity and thus automatically construing the terms in question against the insurer. On reflection we are satisfied that we should have continued beyond the point of finding ambiguity vel non; we should have continued to follow Texas rules of construction, as we do now.

[3]Cf. Haight v. Savoy Apartments, 814 S.W.2d 849, 854 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1991, writ denied) (recognizing question whether sexual assault arises within scope of employment, but declining to answer question).

The policy does not define those central terms. Under Texas law, an undefined term in a contract of insurance must be given the meaning that ordinary persons in the position of the contracting parties would give to such term.[4] Terms in an insurance contract are "given their ordinary and generally accepted meaning unless the policy shows the words were meant in a technical or different sense."[5] If a policy does not define a term but the term has a defined legal meaning, an ordinary person would conclude that the contract term in question encompasses the standard legal definition.[6] Therefore, despite the existence of ambiguities in the policy's wording, we cannot automatically construe the policy against the insurer when, as here, we find that the ambiguous wording does have a defined meaning in law.

The terms at issue in this case have

[6] See St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. v. Tri-State Cattle Feeders, Inc., 628 S.W.2d 844, 847 (Tex. App.--Amarillo 1982, writ ref'd n.r.e.) (because the policy does not define "theft," the term is given the same meaning it has under the Texas criminal law); Standard Fire Ins. Co. v. Griggs, 567 S.W.2d 60, 63 (Tex. Civ. App.--Amarillo 1978, writ ref'd n.r.e.).

been clearly defined by Texas case law. Even though the instant case involves interpretation of language in an insurance policy and is neither a common law nor statutory tort case which implicates the doctrine of respondeat superior, the legal definition of terms found in the latter line of cases are not necessarily inapplicable to the former. In Smith v. M System Food Stores, Inc.,[7] the Texas Supreme Court stated that "[t]o be within the scope of employment, the conduct must be of the same general nature as that authorized or incidental to the conduct authorized." Conduct is within the scope of employment only if the act is "in furtherance of the master's business, or for the accomplishment of the object for which [their servant] was employed."[8] Conduct is not within the scope of employment if the actor is merely furthering his own interest.[9]

Thus, there is no uncertainty in the meaning of "within the scope of employment" under Texas law. there is also no question whether Officer Taylor's action against McLaren fit the definition of that term. Clearly it did not. His acts were in no way either authorized by his employer or performed for the accomplishment of the object for which he was employed. Hence the district court did not err in holding as a matter of law that the policy did not provide coverage

[8] Id.

[9] Rosales v. American Buslines, Inc., 598 S.W.2d 706, 708 (Tex. Civ. App.--El Paso 1980, writ ref'd n.r.e).

to Officer Taylor for his actions against McLaren.

In Smith, a respondeat superior case, a security guard lawfully arrested a shoplifter. A bystander made some remarks to the security guard in connection with the arrest, and the security guard responded by unlawfully arresting and striking the bystander. The supreme court held that the guard's misconduct was not within the scope of his employment. Although Smith is factually distinguishable from the instant case because here officer Taylor sexually assaulted the person who was the object of his lawful stop, his actions nevertheless did not come "within the scope of his employment" as that phrase is defined in Smith. Given the recognized definitions of the contested terms, we never reach the rule of contractual construction that controlled our original opinion--that ambiguities in contracts are construed against the drafter of the instrument, particularly when the instrument is an insurance policy.

C. Duty to defend

In her motion for summary judgment, McLaren asserted that Imperial and Special Risks had breached their duty to defend Taylor in the state court damage suit that McLaren had brought against him. The policy provided that Imperial would defend "any claim or suit against the insured seeking damages on account of such wrongful acts, even if the allegations of the claim or suit are groundless, false or fraudulent . . . ." The district court denied McLaren's motion and granted Imperial's and Special Risks' motions for summary judgment on this issue. In so doing, that court held that Imperial and Special Risks had no duty to defend Taylor because as a matter of law the conduct of Taylor alleged in McLaren's complaint was not within the coverage of the policy. As an alternative ground, the district court held that McLaren had failed to raise any material fact issue that Taylor had been damaged by Imperial's and Special Risks' refusal to defend. Because Taylor's alleged conduct was not covered by the policy, reasoned the court, the only damage which could possibly have resulted from the failure to defend would have been the legal expenses, if any, that Taylor had incurred in defending the suit. But, as there is no evidence that Taylor ever attempted to defend the suit, the record is devoid of evidence of damages.

With respect to Imperial, McLaren argues that, under the "allegations of the complaint rule," established in Heyden Newport Chemical Corp. v. Southern General Insurance Co.,[10] Imperial had and breached a duty to defend Taylor against McLaren's claims. In Heyden, the Texas Supreme Court stated:

> We think that in determining the duty of a liability insurance company to defend a lawsuit the allegations of the complainant should be considered in the light of the policy provisions without reference to the truth or falsity of such allegations and without reference to what the parties know or believe the true facts to be, or without reference to a legal

McLaren argues that, regardless of whether the policy provided coverage for Officer Taylor's acts, the allegations in her damage suit were sufficient to invoke Imperial's duty to defend under Heyden. We disagree.

There is a distinction between cases in which an insurer seeks to avoid a duty to defend on the ground that, although the alleged conduct by the insured is covered by the policy, the insured is not liable in the underlying suit, and cases in which the insurer seeks to avoid a duty to defend on the ground that the alleged conduct is not covered by the policy. Heyden involved the former situation. In Heyden, the insurance company denied coverage and refused to defend the insured on the sole ground that it was not liable because the negligent wrongdoer was not the agent of the insured. The insurance company made no argument that the actions of the wrongdoer, if he was an agent of the insured, were not covered by the policy.

The latter situation is illustrated by Argonaut Southwest Insurance Co. v. Maupin.[12] In that case, the insurance policy covered damages the insured becam e legally obligated to pay because of the injury to property caused by "accident" or other "condition for which the insured is responsible . . . which was not intended." The Texas Supreme Court examined the complaint filed against the insured and determined that the complaint alleged that the insured had committed an intentional tort. As the policy did not cover intentional torts, the court held, the insurance company had no duty to defend the insured.[13]

The instant case falls in the same category as Maupin. Even when we apply the "allegations of the complaint rule," we find that Imperial had no duty to defend. As already noted, the policy covers "wrongful acts arising out of Law Enforcement activities." The policy set forth Imperial's duty to defend as follows:

> [T]he Company shall have the right and duty to defend any claim or suit against the Insured seeking damages on account of such wrongful acts, even if the allegations of the claim or suit are groundless, false or fraudulent . . . . (emphasis added)

Thus, Imperial had a duty to defend only

actions against Taylor "seeking damages on account of" "wrongful acts arising out of Law Enforcement activities." McLaren's complaint alleged acts which, as we now hold, did not come within the coverage of the policy. Imperial therefore had no duty to defend Taylor, so the district court did not err in granting Imperial's motion for summary judgment on that issue.

As to Special Risks, McLaren had produced no summary judgment proof sufficient to raise a question of fact regarding the existence of an obligation of Special Risks, under the policy or otherwise, to defend Officer Taylor against McLaren's claims. Thus, the district court did not err in granting Special Risks' motion for summary judgment on that issue.

D. Statute of limitations

In addition to the claims discussed above, McLaren brought claims against Imperial and Special Risks for (1) breac h of a duty of good faith and fair dealing; (2) false, misleading and deceptive acts and practices under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act; and (3) violations of Tex. Ins. Code art. 21.21 (collectively, the "bad faith" claims). In our original panel opinion we analyzed the holding of the district court, and the reasons therefor: that it need not discuss that argument because summary judgment was proper on other grounds, but that, if limitations had been the sole ground for the defendants' motions for summary judgment, all of McLaren's claims other than her claim against Imperial for payment under the policy would have been barred by limitations. Our original treatment of the issues of time bar is unchanged by our action here of reversing our original position and affirming the district court in all respects. Therefore, we do not reiterate but incorporate by reference the discussion set forth in "Section C. Statute of Limitations," in our original opinion. The only difference is the one regarding McLaren's assertion that her claim for failure to defend comes under a four year limitation period and thus is not barred. In our original opinion we did not address that point because we held that her claim was moot. On rehearing we do not address that point because we are now holding on the merits that neither Imperial nor Special Risks had a duty to defend Taylor. Consequently we do not reach the issue of a time bar on McLaren's claim of a duty to defend.

E. Taylor's assignment of rights to McLaren

In its petition for rehearing, Imperial also challenges our decision to render judgment in favor of McLaren to the full extent of the policy limits. Because we now affirm the district court's summary judgment in favor of Imperial, we need not address that issue. We note, however, that there are at least hints of collusion and impropriety in Taylor's failure to contest McLaren's damage suit which resulted in a judgment against him in excess of $7,000,000, and his subsequent assignment to McLaren of his rights against Imperial under the policy. As we held above, Imperial rightfully refused to defend Taylor against McLaren's claim. But even if Imperial's refusal had been wrongful, Taylor had a duty to defend himself reasonably in the damage suit in order to minimize his own and Imperial's potential legal liability.[14] As Taylor appears to have disregarded that duty, Imperial might not have been liable to the full extent of the policy limits even if we had left intact our original opinion on liability under the policy. As such, a remand might have been in order, even though it would have been limited to issues of quantum.

III.

[14] See Laster v. American Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., No. 91-7234 (5th Cir. 1992); Britt v. Cambridge Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 717 S.W.2d 476, 480-83 (Tex. App.--San Antonio 1986, writ ref'd n.r.e.).

Because Officer Taylor's wrongful acts were not committed in the scope of his employment, as that phrase is defined under Texas caselaw, the insurance policy did not provide coverage of those acts. As the acts alleged within the "four corners" of McLaren's complaint did not fall within the coverage described within the "four corners" of the insurance policy, Imperial had no duty under the so-called "eight corners" test to defend Taylor against McLaren's suit. All of McLaren's remaining claims were barred by statutes of limitations. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court is now

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND

This is a diversity action. Texas substantive law controls. Roberta McLaren ("McLaren") is plaintiff, and Imperial Casualty and Indemnity Company ("Imperial"), Special Risks, Inc., ("Special") and Russell Grace, Inc., ("Grace") are defendants. The matters that are before the court for ruling are (1) Special's motion to dismiss the complaint as to it because of lack of personal jurisdiction; (2) McLaren's motion for summary judgment; (3) Special's motion for summary judgment; (4) Imperial's motion for summary judgment; and (5) Grace's motion for summary judgment.

The court has concluded that Special's motion to dismiss should be denied, that McLaren's motion for summary judgment should be denied, and that defendants' motions for summary judgment should be granted.

Nature of the Litigation

A rather simple dispute over liability insurance coverage is at the heart of this action. As is so often true in cases of this sort, the simple coverage dispute comes to the court clothed in legal garb woven with a multitude of legal theories designed to maximize the gain by McLaren from any possible misstep by the insurer and to impose on the non-insurer defendants basically the same liability sought to be imposed on the insurer defendant because of their alleged relationships to the insurance coverage dispute.

The Insurance Coverage:

Imperial, the insurer defendant, issued to Bedford Police Department and City of Bedford, as the "Named Insureds", a liability insurance policy bearing the title "Law Enforcement Professional Liability Insurance" ("policy"). Exhibit "G" to Amended Complaint. Persons and entities who were "Insureds" to whom liability insurance coverage potentially was afforded by the policy were, inter alia, Bedford Police Department, City of Bedford and employees of each. Id. at

Imperial promised in the insuring clause of the policy that, subject to other provisions, limitations and exclusions contained in the policy, it would:

> . . . pay on behalf of the Insured all sums which the Insured shall become legally obligated to pay as damages because of wrongful acts arising out of Law Enforcement activities.

Id. at page 1 (emphasis added). The term "wrongful act", as used in the insuring clause, is defined in the policy to mean:

> WRONGFUL ACT Means only or all of the following: Actual or alleged error, misstatement or misleading statement, omission, neglect or breach of duty by the Insured individual or collectively, while acting or failing to act within the scope of his employment or official duties pertaining to the law enforcement functions of the Insured;

Id at page 2 (emphasis added).

The insuring clause goes on to provide that the coverage of the policy extends, subject to the terms and provisions of the policy, to (a) legal liability of the insured to pay damages because of personal injury or bodily injury and (b) punitive damage, where permitted by law. The terms "Bodily Injury" and "Punitive Damage" are defined in the policy in ways that are not relevant to the court's rulings. The term "Personal Injury" is defined in the policy as follows:

> PERSONAL INJURY Means false arrest, erroneous service of civil papers, false imprisonment, malicious prosecution, assault and battery, libel, slander, defamation of character, discrimination, mental anguish, wrongful entry or eviction, violation of property or deprivation of any rights, privileges or immunities > secured by the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America or the State for which the Named Insured may be held liable to the party injured in any action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceedings for redress. However, no act shall be deemed to be or result in personal injury unless committed in the regular course of duty by the Insured.[1]

Id. at page 3 (emphasis added).

Thus, the policy language leaves no doubt that its coverage as to a person who is an "Insured" because of his employment by Bedford Police Department or City of Bedford as a law enforcement

[1]A proper reading of the "Personal Injury" definition probably leads to the conclusion that the coverage applicable to "Personal Injury" extends only to the "Named Insured." However, for the purpose of this memorandum opinion, the court is assuming, arguendo, that the "Personal Injury" part of the coverage extends, subject to the terms and provisions of the policy, to each person who qualifies as an "Insured" under the policy.

officer extends only to an obligation he has to pay damages that has resulted from an act or omission he has committed "while acting or failing to act within the scope of his employment or official duties pertaining to law enforcement functions" arising out of law enforcement activities. The policy language makes perfectly clear that its coverage does not extend to liability for damages if the liability is the product of a personal lark or venture of the insured that occurred during his deviation for a personal reason from the performance of his law enforcement duties.

Another obligation undertaken by Imperial under the policy was to defend any claim or suit brought against an insured "seeking damages on account of such wrongful acts." Id. at page 1. The use of the term "such wrongful acts" obviously has reference to the "wrongful acts arising out of Law Enforcement activities" that are mentioned in the insuring clause. So, when the definition of "wrongful acts" is taken into account, the policy says that the insurer's defense obligation exists only when the claims or suit against the insured are the result of an act or omission by the insured "while acting or failing to act within the scope of his employment or official duties" arising out of law enforcement activities.

The policy language that is determinative of this case is clear and unambiguous and would be understood by any reasonably intelligent person.

Facts upon which the Claim of Insurance Coverage is Based:

The core of McLaren's complaint, as amended, is a claim that a police officer of City of Bedford by the name of Larry Taylor ("Taylor") was an insured under the policy and that the policy extended liability insurance protection to Taylor in respect to claims McLaren had against him because of a sexual assault Taylor inflicted on her in April 1985. McLaren incorporates in her complaint the contents of a written statement she made shortly after the event, in which she gives explicit details of her encounter with Taylor. Amended Complaint, page 2 and Exhibit "A." An abbreviated, less lurid account follows:

After an evening of entertainment on April 22, 1985, with friends, and as she was driving on a freeway in Bedford, Texas, McLaren was stopped by Taylor, a

Bedford police officer. At the direction of Taylor, she exited her car, displayed her driver's license and underwent a sobriety test, which, apparently, she passed. Upon discovering that McLaren did not have proof of liability insurance with her, Taylor gave her a ticket for no liability insurance. Taylor then told McLaren to get in her car and follow him, without further explanation. She followed him off the freeway to a deserted area, where Taylor pulled into a parking lot near industrial buildings. Taylor told McLaren to exit her car and enter his. As she was in the process of doing so, Taylor told her to step back as another car went by, and then he told her to come on around and get in his car. She inquired as to whether she should get in the front or back, and followed his directions when he told her to enter the front. After she was in the front seat Taylor told her to pull her dress up. She pulled it all the way up like he told her to. Then, he told her to unhook her bra and raise it up, which she did. Taylor then stared at her and made complimentary comments about her endowments, at which point the thought passed her mind that Taylor's conduct seemed crude. Next, Taylor unzipped his pants and proceeded to force Taylor [sic] to perform an oral sex act on him. Once the act was completed and McLaren straightened out her dress, Taylor altered the traffic ticket and told her that he was going to give her a citation for no driver's license and that she would be able to take it to the judge a with her driver's license and have it dismissed. When she inquired as to whether she could leave, Taylor told her that she could. She went to her car. Taylor told her to stand by her car until he lad left.

Taylor's conduct led to a criminal indictment and his conviction on the offense of sexual assault.

The State Court Suit and Events Related to it:

In the process of attempting to parlay the unfortunate event she describes in her complaint into a joint and several recovery from defendants of approximately $25,000,000.00, McLaren, in cooperation with Taylor, has employed techniques that have become all too familiar in the legal community.

The first overt act was the giving by Taylor of notice to Imperial, Special and Grace of the existence of McLaren's claims against him. McLaren fortified the notice by giving a notice of her own, which told of her intent to file suit against Taylor if her claims were not resolved. When Imperial, quite understandably in view of the policy language, did not accede to the demands that it make payment to McLaren on behalf of Taylor, McLaren filed a damage suit against City of Bedford and Taylor in a state district court.[2] The damage suit pleading revealed on its face that the claims by McLaren against Taylor arose from personal conduct on the part of Taylor, unrelated to any law enforcement goal. Basically, the pleading gave a short version of the April 1985 encounter between McLaren and Taylor that is described in the written statement mentioned above. The pleading made clear that McLaren's causes of action against Taylor were based on the encounter thus described, and went on to complain that Taylor's restraint of McLaren was "devoid of any lawful justification whatsoever." Exhibit "C" to Amended Complaint, pages 1-2.

[2]After the suit was filed McLaren reached a settlement with City of Bedford and caused it to be dismissed from the suit, leaving Taylor as the sole defendant.

Taylor made demand on Imperial to assume his defense in the damage suit. Imperial declined. That left McLaren and Taylor to their own devices in the handling of the state court litigation. The next prop in the scenario was the taking by McLaren in June 1989 of something in the nature of a default judgment against Taylor in the damage suit for $7,018,045.00 (actual damages of $2,000,000.00, punitive damages of $5,000,000.00 and attorney's fees of $18,045.00), plus interest on $2,000,000.00 at the rate of ten percent per annum, compounded annually, from April 25, 1985, plus interest on the full amount of the judgment at the rate of ten percent per annum, compounded annually, from date of judgment until paid.[3] Presumably after the judge presiding over the damage suit had been persuaded to sign the judgment, Taylor assigned to McLaren "any and all cause (sic) of action that he had against the insurance company and/or companies, their agents, or employees who either insured, adjusted, represented or misrepresented and/or failed to properly adjust and/or defend him for liability during the time he was a police officer for the City of Bedford. . . ." Plaintiff's Amended Complaint, page 4.

McLaren's Claims Before this Court:

The instant action was brought by McLaren as assignee of Taylor. Not only does McLaren seek to recover the amount of the damage suit judgment, she asks for recovery of treble that amount plus attorney's fees she will incur in the prosecution of this action. She complains in her amended complaint of Imperial's failure to pay her claims against Taylor and its failure to defend her suit against Taylor. Liability is sought to be imposed on Grace because of its participation in causing the policy to be issued. Her complaint against Special arises from a role it had in adjusting her claims against Taylor.

All the alleged wrongs about which McLaren complains in this action are said by her to have been committed against Taylor. She seeks to recover as Taylor's assignee what she alleges he could have recovered if he had not assigned his claims to her.

Summary Disposition is Appropriate in this Action

This action is particularly suited for summary disposition under the rules and standards expressed by the Supreme Court in Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp, 475 U.S. 574 (1986); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317 (1986); and, Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242 (1986). Once the blunderbuss allegations of McLaren's amended complaint are carefully scrutinized, and the chaff is brushed aside, her claims are seen to be totally without merit. For the most part, the lack of merit is affirmatively demonstrated by McLaren's amended complaint and the exhibits accompanying it. Other of her claims are proved unmeritorious by affidavits and other parts of the summary judgment record. The rest of her claims fall by the wayside because of her failure to come forward with summary judgment evidence after the existence of evidence to support the claims was challenged by one or more of defendants' motions. See International Ass'n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers v. Intercontinental Manufacturing Co., 812 F.2d 219, 222 (5th Cir. 1986).

The Policy Does Not Provide Coverage to Taylor for Claims Resulting from his Encounter with McLaren

Bearing in mind the policy definition of "wrongful acts", the fact of non-coverage is self-evident from the policy language. McLaren's claims against Taylor do not in any shape, form or fashion arise from any act or omission on the part of Taylor within the scope of his employment or official duties pertaining to law enforcement functions arising out of law enforcement activities.

The ultimate issue in City of Green Cove Springs v. Donaldson, 348 F.2d 197 (5th Cir. 1965), was whether a sexual assault committed by a police officer during his duty hours on a person he had detained in the course of his police work was committed within the scope of his employment. A related question was whether the scope of employment issue should have been submitted to the jury. Each of these questions was answered in the negative. The Fifth Circuit held that the facts, construed most favorably to the plaintiff, would admit of no inference "other than that in his rape of the plaintiff, Officer Moseley stepped aside from his employment to accomplish his own, rather than the City's purpose." 348 F.2d at 203.

The same result was reached in Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles, 266 Cal. Rptr. 487 (Cal. Ct. App. 1988). In that case Mary M. had been raped by a Los Angeles police officer during his working hours. The court held as a matter of law that the officer's rape of Mary M. "did not take place within the scope of his employment." 266 Cal. Rptr. at 499.

Principles of law adopted by Texas courts governing the master and servant relationship would cause a Texas court to reach the same results that were reached by the Fifth Circuit and the California court. In Smith v. M. System Food Stores, 156 Tex. 484, 297 S.W.2d 112 (1957), the Texas Supreme Court held that as a matter of law a police officer was not acting within the scope of his employment when he assaulted an acquaintance of a woman he had detained for shoplifting. The Texas test for scope of employment in the context of the facts presented in Smith was expressed by the court as follows:

> To be within the scope of employment "the conduct must be of the same general nature as that authorized or incidental > to the conduct authorized." Restatement of the Law of Agency, Sec. 229. In Home Telephone & Electric Co. v. Branton, Tex. Civ. App., 7 S.W.2d 627-629, in an opinion by our present Chief Justice, then on the Court of Civil Appeals, the rule was said to be that: "* * * where the act of the servant is not in the furtherance of the master's business, or for the accomplishment of the object for which he was employed, but is performed as a resentment of insults, or in the furtherance of personal animosities of the servant, the master is not liable."

297 S.W.2d at 114. See also, Rosales v. American Buslines, Inc., 598 S.W.2d 706 (Tex. Civ. App. - El Paso 1980, writ ref'd n.r.e.); Gifford-Hill & Co. Inc., v. Moore, 479 S.W.2d 711 (Tex. Civ. App. - Tyler 1972, no writ); and Sheffield v. Central Freight Lines, Inc., 435 S.W.2d 954 (Tex. Civ. App. - Dallas 1968, no writ).

Applying the principles of Smith to the instant action, the acts of Taylor about which McLaren complains were not within the scope of his employment because they were not in the furtherance of the business of City of Bedford or for the accomplishment of the object for which he was employed, but, instead, they were committed in the furtherance and gratification of personal desires and impulses of Taylor. From those conclusions there naturally follows the conclusion that the illegal Taylor-McLaren encounter was not an act or failure to act on the part of Taylor "within the scope of his employment or official duties pertaining to the law enforcement functions of the Insured" arising out of law enforcement activities. Therefore, the coverage of the policy does not extend to Taylor as to claims arising from the encounter.

In an affidavit McLaren filed with her responses to the defendants' motions, she puts emphasis on the circumstances that Taylor was equipped with a large pistol and was in a marked police car, that she assumed that she was being arrested when Taylor told her to follow him, that Taylor put his hand on his revolver after she entered his vehicle, that the lights and police radio remained on while she was in the car, and the like. If the point of the affidavit is to prove that the assault was within Taylor's apparent duties as a police officer, it not only is absurd, but it has missed the point. The policy coverage does not extend to conduct an injured party might perceive to be within the scope of the officer's duties unless the conduct is, in fact, as it is perceived to be. In other words, the coverage relates to scope of employment and not apparent scope of employment.

McLaren places emphasis in her summary judgment papers on risks that are include in the "Personal Injury" definition in the policy. This fails to take into account that the question of coverage, vel non, for "Personal Injury" is not reached if the activity of which complaint is made is not, as it is required by the insuring clause, a "wrongful act[s] arising out of Law Enforcement activity." Moreover, even if the "wrongful act" hurdle could be overcome by McLaren, she still would be faced with the last sentence of the "Personal Injury" policy definition, which says that "no act shall be deemed to be or result in personal injury unless committed in the regular course of duty by the insured." For all the reasons previously given, the conduct of Taylor about which McLaren has complained clearly was not committed in the regular course of his duty as a law enforcement officer.

Next, McLaren contends that defendants are prohibited from questioning existence of scope of employment at the time of the encounter because, she argues, the award of attorney's fees made to her in the June 1989 damage suit judgment was made pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §§ 1983 and 1988, which means, according to her reasoning, that the state district court adjudged that Taylor was acting under color of state law at the time of the encounter and, therefore, was acting within the course of his employment. The court does not need to evaluate the correctness of McLaren's argument as to the kind of adjudication the state court made in connection with the award of attorney's fees[4] because the defendants in this action would not in any event be bound by any state court adjudication against Taylor of issues pertinent to coverage under the policy.

A holding of the Texas Supreme Court in Employers Casualty Co. v. Block, 744 S.W.2d 940 (Tex. 1988), was that a liability insurer that has not participated in the defense of a damage suit brought against its insured is not bound by adjudications in the damage suit judgment on issues that determine coverage. As does Imperial in the instant case, the insurer in Block asserted non-liability to its insured as to a damage suit judgment because of policy provisions that caused it not to have coverage. The insured and the damage suit plaintiff contended that res judicata and collateral estoppel resulting from the damage suit judgment prevented Employers Casualty from litigating coverage facts in a later suit brought against the insurer for recovery of the amount of the judgment.

[4]"Under color of state law" does not necessarily equate to "scope of employment." See Brown v. Miller, 631 F.2d 408, 411 (5th Cir. 1980).

In Block, the Texas Supreme Court expressed approval of the 1978 Texas Court of Appeals decision in Hargis v. Maryland American General Insurance Co., 567 S.W.2d 923 (Tex. Civ. App. - Eastland 1978, writ ref'd n.r.e.), which held that the questions of liability of the insured and of coverage are separate and distinct, and that a prior judgment establishing liability against the insured is not binding on the insurer as to the issue of coverage. The Supreme Court noted that in Hargis the Court of Civil Appeals was dealing with a judgment resulting from litigation, but said that "[i]t is apparent that the reasoning of the court applies as much, if not more, to agreed judgments." 744 S.W.2d at 943. In the course of holding that Employers Casualty was not bound by adjudications made in the damage suit judgment, the court said in Block that:

> Likewise, in light of the fact that the respective positions of CSI [the insured] and Employers Casualty regarding coverage were in conflict, no privity existed between the > parties, thus precluding the application of the collateral estoppel doctrine. See Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 58(a) (1982). Therefore, we conclude that Employers Casualty should not be precluded from litigating the issue of coverage in the present case.

744 S.W.2d at 943. For the same reasons, none of the adjudications pertinent to coverage that are expressed or implied in the damage suit judgment against Taylor are binding on the defendants in this action.

McLaren's Arguments that the Policy Imposed a Defense Obligation even Though the Claims Did Not Arise from "Wrongful Acts"

In her response to defendants' motions for summary judgment, and as the ground for her own motion, McLaren argues that under Texas law Imperial had a duty to defend the damage suit because of the allegations she made in the damage suit petition. According to her, the duty to defend would exist despite conclusive proof that the policy did not provide coverage.

The so-called "allegations of the complaint" rule is generally stated to be that the existence of the defense duty depends upon the allegation of the underlying complaint against the insured without regard to the true facts. A careful analysis of the Texas cases discloses that if the rule were to be applied to this case it would operate in favor of defendants but that, in fact, it should play no role in a coverage dispute of this kind.

The rule is limited in the reported cases to two kinds of situations. One is where the insurance company seeks to avoid the defense obligation on the ground that extrinsic facts establish that the insured is not liable in the underlying suit. In that situation, the courts hold that the insurer must defend anyway. It cannot avoid defense merely because extrinsic facts show non-liability of its insured. The policy itself says it must defend even if the allegations are groundless, false or fraudulent. The leading case is Heyden Newport Chemical Corp. v. Southern General Insurance Co., 387 S.W.2d 22 (Tex. 1965), in which the underlying damage claim against the insured was based on allegations that the actual wrongdoer, whose negligence was alleged to have caused the damage, was the agent of the insured. The insurance company denied coverage on the ground that the true facts show that, despite the allegations, the negligent wrongdoer was not the agent to the insured and that consequently the insured was not liable. This was the context in which the Supreme Court held that allegations of the petition were controlling and that the insurance company owed a defense. The company did not even assert a policy exclusion or other coverage defense.

The second situation in which the rule has been applied is where the underlying complaint affirmatively alleges a set of facts that fall within an exclusion to the policy coverage or are otherwise outside of the coverage. The insurer need not defend because the policy, as in the present case, requires the company to defend only those suits "seeking" damages that are payable under the policy. For example, in Argonaut

Southwest Insurance Company v. Maupin, 500 S.W.2d 633 (Tex. 1973), the underlying complaint was construed by the court to allege an intentional act. The court held the company was not obligated to defend because the complaint on its face alleged conduct that was outside the coverage of the policy.

An illustration of both kinds of situations is seen in Maryland Casualty Co. v. Moritz, 138 S.W.2d 1095 (Tex. Civ. App. - Austin 1940, writ ref'd), in which the court heavily relied in the Heyden case. In Moritz, Klein, the insured's truck driver, had exchanged that truck for one owned and driven by one Neilson before the accident that gave rise to the underlying claim. Thus, Klein was driving Neilson's truck, Neilson was driving the insured's truck, and both proceeded along, one behind the other, until the Neilson truck being driven by Klein collided with a third vehicle, killing its occupant. The insurance company refused to defend the insured. He successfully defended and than sued for cost of defense.

The court observed that if the allegations in the underlying death action had been limited to stating a cause of action for Klein's negligence in operating the Neilson truck, the insurance company would have been correct in its refusal to defend because the underlying petition would have affirmatively showed that the Neilson truck being operated by Klein was not covered by the policy. However, the court explained that the petition further alleged that Klein had retained control of the insured's truck, even though he was not driving it, and that, in the course of that agency for the insured, his negligence also contributed to the accident. Since the allegations concerning his control and negligence related to liability, not coverage, the company owed a defense obligation.

The pleading by which the damage suit in the instant case was filed and prosecuted made the following allegations:

> Plaintiff Roberta E. McLaren drove her car east along Airport Freeway and into the City of Bedford, Texas, the late evening of April 22nd or the early morning of April 23rd, 1985. There, in Bedford, Ms. McLaren was stopped by a man, a police officer of the City of Bedford, Defendant Larry W. Taylor. He asked, in apparent performance of police functions and under color of his office, that she step from her car and submit to a quite short field sobriety test.

> Still in apparent performance of police functions and under color of his office, Officer Taylor then instructed Ms. McLaren to take her car, and follow closely behind his police car. He led her to a parking lot, dark and deserted and off the highway, and still in apparent performance of police functions and under color of his office, Officer Taylor instructed her this time to leave her car and get into the front seat of the police car.
> There, armed, Officer Taylor lifted Ms. McLaren's dress, demanded that she unclasp and remove her bra, exposed his sexual organ and grabbing hold of the back of her head, forced his sexual organ into Roberta McLaren's mouth, and in her mouth and on her face, ejaculated.

Then, Officer Taylor released her. Exhibit "C" to First Amended Complaint, pages 1-2. The damage suit petition went on to allege that Taylor's restraint of McLaren was devoid of any lawful justification whatsoever." Id. at page

2. These allegations state facts that affirmatively establish non-coverage because the only reasonable conclusion that can be reached from the allegations is that the liability sought to be imposed on Taylor is not on account of "wrongful acts arising out of Law Enforcement activities", as those words are used in the insuring clause of the policy. Conclusory "scope of employment," or the like, allegations cannot prevail over the precise factual allegations that show positively that McLaren's claims arise from a purely personal venture of Taylor. Therefore, if the "allegations of the complaint" rule were to be given effect in this action, it would apply in favor of the defendants.

Moreover, there appears to be a more general rule that the true facts always can be used to establish non-existence of a defense obligation, no matter what the plaintiff might allege in her damage suit complaint. In Gonzalez v. American State Insurance Co. of Texas, the court explained:

> Where the insurance company refuses to defend its insured on the ground that the insured is not liable to the claimant, the allegations in the claimant's petition control, and facts extrinsic to those alleged in the petition may not be used to controvert those allegations. But, where the basis for the refusal to defend is that the events giving rise to the suit are outside the coverage of the insurance policy, facts extrinsic to the claimants petition may be used to determine whether a duty to defend exists.

628 S.W.2d 184, 187 (Tex. App. - Corpus Christi 1982, no writ) (discussing Fort Worth Lloyds v. Garza, 527 S.W.2d 195 (Tex. Civ. App. - Corpus Christi 1975, writ ref'd n.r.e.); International Service Insurance Co. v. Boll, 392 S.W.2d 158 (Tex. Civ. App. - Houston 1965, writ ref'd n.r.e.); and Cook v. Ohio Casualty Insurance Company, 418 S.W.2d 712 (Tex. Civ. App. - Texarkana 1967, no writ)). Another case so holding is Massachusetts Bonding and Insurance Co. v. Roessler, 112 S.W.2d 275 (Tex. Civ. App. - Fort Worth 1937, writ dismissed). See also Blue Ridge Insurance Co. v. Hanover Insurance Co., 748 F. Supp. 470 (N.D. Tex. 1990).

As the court noted in Hagen Supply Corp. v. Iowa National Mutual Insurance Co., 331 F.2d 199 (8th Cir. 1964), the "allegations of the complaint" rule simply does not apply when the issue to be decided is whether there is coverage, as distinguished from whether there is liability on the part of the insured. The court explained:

> The general rule is that an insurance company under a provision requiring it to defend an action, even if it is groundless, false or fraudulent, is under no duty to defend a claim which is outside the coverage provided by the policy.

331 F.2d at 203-04. While the court decisions are not uniform on the subject under discussion, they generally support the rule expressed by the Texas court in Gonzales and the Eighth circuit in Hagen Supply Corp.[5]

[5]A collection of cases on this subject, and the subject of damages recoverable for breach of duty to defend, is found in an annotation at 49 A.L.R.2d 694, entitled "Consequences of liability insurer's refusal to assume defense of action against insurer upon ground that claim upon which action is based is not within coverage of policy." Court decisions in point to the issues under discussion are in § 5 of the later case service pertaining to the annotation.

Under this rule, even if McLaren's damage suit pleading could be read to allege facts that, if true, would cause coverage to exist, Imperial nevertheless would not have a duty to defend the suit because the facts alleged would be false. As previously noted in this opinion, the defense feature of the policy expressly states that the duty to defend is applicable only to claims or suits against the insurer seeking damages on account of "such wrongful acts." The policy language that defines the duty to defend is as follows:

> [T]he Company shall have the right and duty to defend any claim or suit against the Insured seeking damages on account of such wrongful acts, even if the allegations of the claim or suit are groundless, > false or fraudulent, and may make such investigation and settlement of any claim or suit as it deems expedient.

Exhibit "G" to Amended Complaint (emphasis added).

The words that are dispositive of the matter under discussion are "seeking damages on account of such wrongful acts."[6] There is no reasonable interpretation that can be given to this policy language other than that the duty to defend exists only if the claim or suit against the insured is one "seeking damages on account of such wrongful acts." Consequently, no matter what the allegations of the damage suit pleading

[6]There are variations of defense clause language in insurance policies. Any version that conditions duty to defend on the existence of claims and suits seeking damages on account of the insuring clause coverage would have the same effect as the language in question.

might have been, Imperial did not have a defense obligation unless, in fact, the acts upon which the claim against Taylor were asserted were ones "seeking damages on account" of "wrongful acts arising out of Law Enforcement activities." The "even if the allegations of the claim or suit are groundless, false or fraudulent" part of the defense clause is not even reached for consideration if the condition precedent to the duty to defend ("suit against the insured seeking damages on account of such wrongful acts") had not been satisfied. The "groundless, false or fraudulent" language refers to the integrity of liability allegations against an insured and not to the quality of allegations in a damage suit pleading of facts that bear on whether there is coverage that would cause the insurance company to have a duty of defense.

A holding that extrinsic evidence of non-coverage may be used to refute the obligation to indemnify, but may not be used to refute the obligation to defend, when, under the language of the policy, neither obligation arises unless there has been a "wrongful act[s] arising out of Law Enforcement activities," would make no sense. The wording of the defense obligation contained in the policy leaves no doubt that the intent of the policy is that a defense obligation exists only when there will be a payment obligation for a judgment that might be rendered in the damage suit.

Imperial had no duty to defend the claims or suit by McLaren against Taylor. Therefore, no liability can be imposed on any of the defendants because of Imperial's failure to defend.

Another Reason why Summary Judgment is Appropriate as to the "Duty to Defend" Claims

Another reason why the failure to defend theory cannot survive a defense motion for summary judgment, or support McLaren's, is that there is no summary judgment evidence that Taylor was damaged by the failure. There is nothing in the record to indicate that Taylor incurred any legal or other expense or suffered other compensable damage because of Imperial's declination to defend. Even if one assumes the existence of a duty to defend, there still would not be a duty to pay the amount of the damage suit judgment because the events giving rise to the judgment are outside the scope of Imperial's promise to pay, as contained in the insuring clause. When an insurer's only breach is of a duty to defend, and there is no payment obligation under the policy, the insurer obviously would not have any obligation to settle or pay the claim against its insured. Its sole obligation would be to provide a defense to the insured, and the sole remedy of the insured for breach of the defense duty would be to recover damages, such as legal expenses incurred by the insured in providing his own defense, suffered by the insured because of the insurer's breach of its promise to defend.

A case of pure breach of duty to defend, which does not at the same time involve the breach of a promise to pay or settlement present quite a different situation from those dealt within the cases such as Blakeley v. American Employers' Insurance Co., 424 F.2d 728 (5th Cir. 1970), and Employers National Insurance Co. v. Zurich American Insurance Co., 792 F.2d 517 (5th Cir. 1986). If the duty to defend is the only one breached, the damages recoverable for the breach ordinarily will correspondingly be limited. The arguments and authorities presented by McLaren on this subject are a mismatch of failure to pay, failure to settle and failure to defend concepts and results. McLaren's Motion for Summary Judgment, pages 10-13. Each of those failures has separate and distinct consequences, though, as McLaren has done, some of the court decisions have mixed and blended them in a confusing and improper way.

This discussion relative to damages is somewhat academic because there seldom would be a duty to defend if there is no coverage, i.e., no duty to pay. Nevertheless, the absence of evidence of damages would provide a ground for summary judgment on the duty to defend theory even if there had been breach of duty to defend in this case.

McLaren's Contentions Related to Non-Approval by the State Board of the Policy Form

McLaren alleges that the policy is of a kind that required approval of the State Board of Insurance of Texas; that it was not approved; that Texas law holds that a company wrongfully failing to submit its insurance policies for approval is estopped from claiming that the policies are void when a claim is made against them; but, that, nevertheless, any exclusionary language in the policies is null and void and cannot be used to defeat the claim of an insured under the policy. Amended Complaint, pages 12-13. At another point in her complaint, as amended, McLaren alleges that the failure to have the policy approved by the State Board estops defendants from denying coverage or from claiming any exclusion in or defense to the policy. Id. at 15. Other allegations make non-specific complaints against each of the defendants in reference to non-approval of the policy form. Id. at 16-18.

The summary judgment record does have evidence that the form of the policy was not approved by the State Board. Except for motor vehicle insurance policies, there is no standard or uniform policy form required in Texas for use in writing casualty or liability insurance. Tex. Ins. Code Ann. art 5.06 & 5.15 (Vernon 1981 & Supp. 1991). Travelers Insurance Co. v. Chicago Bridge & Iron Co., 442 S.W.2d 888, 893 (Tex. Civ. App. - Houston [1st Dist.] 1969, writ ref'd n.r.e.). The filing of forms and rates for casualty insurers, including law enforcement professional liability insurers, is governed by article 5.15 of the Insurance Code, which is entitled "Filing of Rates and Rating Information; Approval." Article 5.15 speaks not to filing or approval of forms but to rates and "rating information." In Chicago Bridge & Iron Co., the court observed that the primary purpose of the Legislature was not the approval of policy forms but approval of premium to be charged. 442 S.W.2d at 894. In that case, the Texas court enforced the policy (endorsement) language in its entirety notwithstanding its non-approval. The court noted that "it should not follow that no insurance is provided to the insured by reason of the insurer's violation of the law." Id. at 894.

Chicago Bridge & Iron Co. does not, as McLaren suggests in her summary judgment papers, hold that exclusions in a non-approved policy form of this kind cannot be enforced by the insurer. Its holding is just the opposite. Obviously, when an insured seeks to enforce a policy such as this, as Taylor, through Mclaren, is seeking to do in this case, the insured cannot select the good and discard the bad. Instead, he must take or leave the policy in its entirety. In this instance, McLaren, as Taylor's assignee, has chosen to take it, and she has taken it with all of its terms and provisions.

Futhermore, the policy language that causes McLaren not to have a cause of acton under the policy is not an exclusion but, rather, is an essential part of the insuring obligation. The language defines the scope of Imperial's insuring obligation in the first instance rather than to constitute an exclusion from a previously defined insuring obligation. Even if there could be basis for argument that policy exclusions are unenforceable, such an argument would be ill-put in this action.

Finally, on this subject, there is no summary judgment evidence that Taylor suffered any damage or harm by reason of the non-approval of the policy form.[7] All claims of McLaren based on non-approval are without merit as a matter of law under the summary judgment record.

Other Theories of Recovery Asserted by McLaren

All of McLaren's theories of recovery are predicated on the soundness of one or more of her contention that already have been decided against her in this memorandum opinion. Having disposed of each of those theories adversely to McLaren, the court has effectively ruled against McLaren on the rest of her theories, including her alleged claims of (a) coverage by estoppel, (b) breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, (c) violation of rules and regulations of the Texas State Board of Insurance, (d) failure to inform City of Bedford and Taylor of the financial condition of Imperial, (e) violations of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §§ 17.41-.63 (Vernon 1987 & Supp. 1991), (f) violations of Tex. Ins. Code Ann. art. 21.21. (Vernon 1981 & supp. 1991), and (g) breach of implied warranty to perform services in a good and workmanlike manner.

[7]The court does not need to decide whether Taylor, as a non-party to the contract, would have the right, in any event, to complain of non-approval of the policy form.

As a matter of law none of McLaren's theories of recovery has merit under the summary judgment record in this case.

Considering the Main Thrust of Grace's Motion for Summary Judgment

There is another reason why Grace's motion has merit. The main ground of Grace's motion for summary judgment is that Grace's contacts with the policy and McLaren's claims against Taylor were insufficient to allow liability to be imposed on Grace even if the court were to conclude that Taylor has insurance coverage for McLaren's claims and that McLaren, through her assignment from Taylor, has causes of action based on the conduct of Imperial in failing to defend Taylor and in failing to pay McLaren's claims against Taylor. The court is of the opinion that this ground is meritorious and provides independent basis for dismissal of McLaren's claims against Grace.

Grace incorporated by reference in its motion for summary judgment an affidavit of Robert W. Grace that had been filed with defendants' notice of removal when this action was removed from state court. The affidavit, which is substantiated by Mr. Grace's deposition testimony, establishes without contradiction that Grace did not have a relationship to issuance of the policy or handling of the claims of McLaren against Taylor that would support any theory of liability against it. Moreover, there is no summary judgment evidence that any of the things about which McLaren complains as to Grace was a producing cause of any loss or damage suffered by Taylor.

The memorandum opinion and order signed by the court December 13, 1990, expressed the determination made by the court that Grace was fraudulently joined in this action, as it was pleaded by McLaren before removal to this court, for the purpose of attempting to defeat the removal rights of the remaining defendants. Since then, McLaren has filed her prolix amended complaint in an apparent effort to contrive a dispute that would prevent summary disposition of the action as to Grace, as well as the other defendants. Her amended complaint comes no closer to the mark than did the pleading it replaced.

The "Non-Assignability" Ground Urged by Defendants in their Motions for Summary Judgment

Imperial and Special urge in their respective motions for summary judgment that McLaren has no right of action because the policy prohibited the assignment from Taylor to her upon which she bases her right to bring the action. The policy language to which they refer reads: "H. NON-ASSIGNABLE: The interest of the Insured under this policy shall not be assignable." Exhibit "G" to Amended Petition, page 3. This ground is without merit. See Maneikis v. St. Paul Insurance Co. of Illinois, 655 F.2d 818, 826 (7th Cir. 1981). No Texas case has been cited by the parties, and none has been found, on this subject; however, the court has no doubt that a Texas court would hold that the policy prohibition against assignment of an interest under the policy is inapplicable to the assignment of causes of action that have come into existence after the loss has occurred.

The Limitations Grounds of the Defense Motions

Each of the defendants relies on limitations as a defense. The court has concluded that, if limitations were the sole ground of the defense motions, summary judgment could not be granted as to the entire case, but that, in such an assumed event, limitations would be an appropriate ground for summary disposition of all of McLaren's theories of recovery other than her theory that Imperial had an obligation to make payment under the policy and that it, therefore, has a payment obligation as to the state court judgment. The court is not engaging in extensive discussion of the limitations grounds in view of the existence of the other, previously mentioned, clear-cut reasons why defendants' motions should be granted.

However, the court notes that McLaren is in error in the reliance she places on Texas court decisions to the effect that the summary judgment burden is on the defendants to bring forward summary judgment evidence to negate the "discovery rule." McLaren's Response to Imperial's Motion for Summary Judgment, page 13. The "discovery rule" is a plea in confession and avoidance, and a plaintiff seeking to benefit from the rule has the burden of proof at trial to prove its elements "as it will generally have greater access to the facts necessary to establish that it falls within the rule." Wood v. William M. Mercer, Inc., 769 S.W.2d 515, 517-18 (Tex. 1988).

A rule of Texas summary judgment procedure is that, in order to gain a summary judgment on the ground of limitations, the moving party has the burden to negate the discovery rule by establishing as a matter of law by summary judgment evidence that the plaintiff discovered or should have discovered the facts upon which the confession and avoidance plea is based far enough in advance of the filing of suit for the applicable limitations period to have elapsed between "discovery" and the filing of suit. Id. at 518, fn. 2; Burns v. Thomas, 786 S.W.2d 266 (Tex. 1990). But, the federal courts are not bound by the state court precedural rules governing summary disposition. Schultz v. Newsweek, Inc., 668 F.2d 911, 917 (6th Cir. 1982); see also Impossible Electronic Techniques, Inc. v. Wackenhut Protective Systems, Inc., 669 F.2d 1026, 1036 n.10 (5th Cir. 1982). The rules applicable here are those announced in cases such as Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 316 (1986), and International Ass'n of Machinists and Aerospace Workers v. Intercontinental Manufacturing Co., 812 F.2d 219 (5th Cir.

1986). In responding to the gorunds of the defense motions urging limitations as a defense, McLaren had the summary judgment burden to adduce some evidence in support of her "discovery rule" plea of confession and avoidance. She failed to meet her summary judgment burden.

Special's Motion to Dismiss for Want of In Personam Jurisdiction

The court has concluded that Special has had sufficient contacts with the State of Texas to authorize the court to exercise jurisdiction over its person and that such exercise comports with fair play and substantial justice. Special's contacts with the State of Texas have been significant enough that it should have reasonably anticipated being haled into court here. See Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462 (1985); World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444

U.S. 286 (1980); Schlobahn v. Schapiro, 784 S.W.2d 355 (Tex. 1990).

By contract with Imperial, Special assumed significant functions that normally would be performed by an insurer in relation to the insurance coverage in question. Nusbaum dep., pages 48-50, 64-66, 70, 144-145, Exhibit 3; Mitilier dep., pages 39-41, 47 & 77. Special's assumed name, address and telephone number were printed on the face of the policy under the words "Send all Notices of Occurrences and or Claims Directly to:". Exhibit G to Amended Complaint, page 1. The processing of McLaren's claim against Taylor was handled, at least initially, through Special. Nusbaum dep., page 121. On October 29, 1982, Emanuel Joseph Nusbaum, who was the major shareholder and president and chairman of the board of Special, became licensed, through sponsorship of Special, by the State Board of Insurance of Texas as a non-resident agent "authorized to act as a Non-Resident Agent in the State of Texas." Nusbaum dep., page 110, Exhibit 7. The license was renewed on October 29, 1984, to remain in effect to October 29, 1986, and it again was renewed on October 29, 1986, to remain in effect to October 29, 1988. Id. The October 29, 1986, renewal showed that the license was to be issued to Mr. Nusbaum d/b/a Special Risks, Inc. Id., Exhibit 7.

ORDER

For the reasons given in the foregoing memorandum opinion, the court ORDERS that:

(1) Special's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction should be, and it is hereby, denied;

(2) McLaren's motion for summary judgment should be, and it is hereby denied;

(3) Imperial's motion for summary judgment should be and is hereby, granted;

(4) Special's motion for summary judgment should be, and it is hereby, granted;

(5) Grace's motion for summary judgment should be, and it is hereby, granted; and

(6) A judgment is to be entered denying McLaren any recovery from Imperial, Special or Grace, and dismissing all of her claims and causes of action against each defendant, with costs of court to be recovered by each defendant from plaintiff.

SIGNED February 12, 1991.

QUESTION PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

As a matter of Texas insurance contract law, does a liability policy apply to a police officer who forces a female traffic offender to perform an oral sex act, when the policy language specifically covers only wrongful acts arising out of law enforcement activities performed within the regular course and scope of the duties of the insured?

RESPONDENTS' BRIEF IN OPPOSITION

COME NOW Imperial Casualty & Indemnity Company and Special Risks, Inc., Respondents, respectfully filing this, their Brief in Opposition, and praying that the Court deny Roberta McLaren's Petition for Writ of Certiorari.

STATEMENT OF REMONSTRATION REGARDING THE CONTENTS OF THE PETITION

The Petition for Writ of Certiorari received by counsel for Respondents lists initially seven "Questions Presented" (Pet. at i-iv). In the main body of the Petition, however, there is reference only to four "Reasons for Granting the Writ," and those four do not correlate to the seven "Questions Presented" (Pet. at 14-30). This is not only confusing, but as well appears to disregard Rule 14.1(j) of the Rules of the Supreme Court.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Because Respondents disagree with some of what Petitioner has included in her Statement of the Case, Respondents are obliged to note such disagreement herein.

Petitioner, Roberta McLaren, sued the City of Bedford, Texas, and Bedford Police Office Larry Taylor in Texas state court. Petitioner settled with the City of Bedford, and obtained a judgment for damages against Taylor, who failed to appear or defend, in June, 1989.

Petitioner states in her petition that "[f]ollowing the rendition of judgment, McLaren discovered that Taylor was the beneficiary of a liability insurance policy obtained for him by his employer, the City of Bedford . . . ." (Pet. at 8). That statement is false.

McLaren had given notice of her claim to Imperial Casualty and Indemnity Company over two years prior to the date of the state court judgment (R. 792). Respondents are not sure why Petitioner feels the need to mislead this Court as to the date she became aware of the insurance policy. Either it is an effort to avoid limitations problems, or it is an attempt to counter the expressed feeling of both the district court and the Court of Appeals that there are "hints of collusion" in Taylor's absolute default (Op. at 13). Whatever Petitioner's reasons, Respondents want the record to be clear on the point.

Petitioner also complains that she was not given the opportunity to reply to Respondents' request for panel rehearing (Pet. at 9). While, technically, Petitioner replied to Respondents' Suggestion for Rehearing In Banc and not, per se, the Petition for Rehearing, the substance of Petitioner's filed reply went directly to the heart of the issue in the case. Petitioner was not somehow denied any "right" to respond.

REASONS FOR DENYING THE WRIT

This case involves a purely state law question regarding the interpretation of a law enforcement liability insurance policy. The Court of Appeals' decision does not conflict with any decision of this Court or of another Court of Appeals. There is no federal question. There is no gross departure from the accepted course of judicial proceedings such as would call for an exercise of this Court's supervisory powers. In sum, this case presents no special or important issue justifying review by certiorari.

THE COURT OF APPEALS CORRECTLY APPLIED TEXAS LAW.

The Court of Appeals found that the actions of the police officer were not covered under the language of the policy, which specifically provided coverage only for acts or omissions within the scope of "employment or official duties pertaining to the law enforcement functions of the Insured," and then only if "committed in the regular course of duty" (R. 504; Petitioner's Appendix E). The Court of Appeals properly construed the policy in light of Texas law and found no legal ambiguity.

No doubt recognizing the grounds justifying certiorari review were lacking. Petitioner has tried to manufacture a "federal question" where none exists. Suddenly, and for the first time anywhere, Petitioner equates her claim to "sexual harassment in the workplace" issues, arguing that the Court of Appeals has somehow "nullified" the reach of Title VII, 1964 Civil Rights Act (Pet. at 14-15).

This is not a "workplace" case. Title VII has no application whatever. Meritor Savings Bank, FSB v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57 (1986), a Title VII case, has no application whatever. Petitioner's attempt to somehow implicate federal employment law is clearly meritless. Moreover, the "workplace" theory was not timely raised below and thus may not be raised here for the first time. Ellis v. Dixon, 349 U.S. 458 (1955).

Petitioner continues erroneously to assert that the Court of Appeals "determined" the insurance contract was ambiguous (Pet. at 21). It did not.

First, Petitioner seems to maintain that the withdrawn original opinion of the Court of Appeals still has some sort of force and effect. Citing the withdrawn opinion is hardly a candid maneuver. As to the opinion on rehearing, the Court of Appeals did not determine that there was legal ambiguity, but rather found that there was an "abstract" ambiguity, which was not "real", when review in the light of accepted Texas law (Op. at 5, 7).

The Court of Appeals rightly found that for conduct to be within the course and scope of employment in Texas the conduct must be like that authorized by the employer and in furtherance of the employer's interests (Op. at 7). Smith v. M System Food Stores, Inc., 297 S.W. 2d 112 (Tex. 1957). The Fifth Circuit went on to hold that, under clear Texas law, the police officer's conduct was not within the scope of employment, and thus not covered by the policy. There is nothing erroneous about this holding.

In Texas, parties of a contract are presumed (1) to know the law extant at the time of the contract and (2) to have intended that the contract language be construed in accordance with existing judicial interpretations. Austin Building Co. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., 432 S.W. 2d 697 (Tex. 1968); Foundation Reserve Ins. Co. v. Cody, 458 S.W. 2d 214 (Tex. Civ. App. - Dallas 1970, no writ); United States v. Myers, 363 F.2d 615 (5th Cir. 1966). The Court of Appeals correctly recognized that the Texas Supreme Court's opinion in Smith v. M System Food Stores, Inc., supra, directly interpreted the policy language at issue. Therefore, the meaning of that language was fixed under Texas law at the time of the issuance of the policy. There was no real ambiguity.

Applying the now-established policy meaning to the facts of the case, the Court of Appeals was easily able to conclude that there was no coverage, because the conduct was not within the regular course and scope of a police officer's duty (Op. at 7-8). There was no need to resort to the rules construing an ambiguous policy against the issuer. The Court of Appeals committed no error in resolving this simple issue. This case merits no further consideration.

II.

THERE WAS NO NEED TO CERTIFY A QUESTION TO THE TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

Even if a petitioner has standing to complain on certiorari that a Court of Appeals did not certify a question to a state supreme court, nothing is presented for consideration by this Court. Neither the record nor the appendix reflects anything upon which this Court could base a review of the matter. Moreover, certification is a decision left to the discretion of the Court of Appeals. Lehman Brothers v. Schein, 416 U.S. 386, 391 (1974).

III.

PETITIONER FAILED TO RAISE THE ISSUE OF DENIAL OF DUE PROCESS AND OBTAIN A RULING ON THE ISSUE IN THE COURTS BELOW.

Petitioner states in her application that the Court of Appeals' correct application of state law as enunciated in Murray v. San Jacinto Agency, Inc., 800 S.W. 2d 826 (Tex. 1990) denied her due process of law. However, this issue was never raised at the district court level nor was it ever raised by Petitioner or ruled on by the Court of Appeals. Because it was never put in issue before the courts below, this contention should not be considered by the Court. Rogers v. Lodge, 458 U.S. 613, 628, fn. 10 (1982); Adickes v. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 147, fn. 2 (1970) ("Where issues are neither raised before nor considered by the Court of Appeals, this Court will not ordinarily consider them."). This issue therefore merits no consideration.

For the above reasons, the Petition for Writ of Certiorari should be denied.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE
UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

PETITIONER'S REPLY BRIEF

To the Honorable, the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Petitioner herein prays that a Writ of Certiorari issue to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to review that Court's July 6, 1992 Judgment and Opinion in this proceeding. Petitioner's Motion for Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc was denied on August 21, 1992.

I. REPLY TO STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

The Petitioner, Roberta McLaren has correctly stated to this Court the proceedings in the courts below including those matters discovered after judgment were rendered against Officer Taylor.[1]

[1]Respondent points out that both the District court and the Court of Appeals allude to "hints of collusion" without pointing out anywhere in the record where such occurs. No question of collusion was raised by any of the three parties in the District court. The District Court makes such a statement in its opinion without citation of authority or reference to the record. There are a number of misstatements and omissions in the district Court opinion designed to make Roberta McLaren look bad. (See Appellant's Brief in the Court of Appeals P. 6-10). The Court of Appeals in its second opinion refers to this matter even though it has nothing to do with resolution of the case. (App. B 25, 26) There is no evidence of collusion anywhere in the record, because there was no collusion in this matter. The Petitioner has asked the Court of Appeals to give her an opportunity to defend herself against this false charge that she colluded with her rapist.

Petitioner was not afforded, by either court the rule requiring that all inferences in a summary judgment proceeding be viewed in a light most favorable to the nonmovant, U.S. v. Diebold, 369 U.S. 654 (1962). Officer Taylor filed an answer, and the Court called the case to trial on June 26, 1989 at which time the Plaintiff settled with the City of Bedford and Defendant Taylor who was proceeding pro se did not appear whereupon a jury was waived and the Court considered testimony, received depositions and testimony and made its award and judgment. (R. 578-79 - civil Docket Sheet 153rd Judicial District Court, Tarrant County, Texas) On November 3, 1989, the Plaintiff requested a hearing to disclose an address of Officer Taylor from the Tarrant County Adult Probation Department Records. It was not until February 6, 1990 that Officer Taylor assigned his cause of action to the Plaintiff. The Texas Supreme Court has upheld such assignments even granted prior to trial where an insurance company denies coverage. American Physicians Insurance Exchange v. Garcia, 36 Texas Supreme Court Journal 406 (January 5, 1993). No hint of collusion occurred in or outside the record in this case and unsupported remarks to that effect serve only to prove the weakness of the court opinions in this case and that rape victims still suffer from antiquated attitudes that they must have "brought it on themselves."

Under Texas law insurance policies are not discoverable in suits against government employees. Section 101.104 Texas Civil Practices and Remedies Code ((b.) "Neither the existence nor amount of insurance is subject to discovery.") McLaren was informed through her attorney of the existence of insurance believed to have been taken out by the City to protect its own interest through an attorney for Special Risks, Inc. (R. 997) The attorney for Special Risks misinformed McLaren's attorney about the insurance coverage claiming, among other things, that it contained an exclusion for criminal offenses. (R. 997) This proved to be false once the contract was obtained following judgment against Taylor as part of the settlement with the City of Bedford, (R. 997 Affidavit of Frank P. Colosi attached to Roberta McLaren's response to Defendant Imperial Casualty and Indemnity Company's Motion for Summary Judgment.) The City, it turned out was insured by another insurer, Imperial refusing to represent either it or Officer Taylor. (R. 517)

Respondents blatantly misrepresent to this Court that the Petitioner has not argued claims of "sexual harassment" in the Courts below. (Brief in Opposition, p. 4) Beginning with her responses to motions for summary judgment by Imperial Casualty (R. 495), Special Risks (R. 492) and Russell Grace, Inc. (R. 519) and continuing through her Brief before the Fifth Circuit (p. 1-40), Reply Brief (p. 4-19) and her Petition for Rehearing (p. 5-13) Petitioner carries forth the same arguments made to this Court in questions

I, II, IV and VII concerning the issues of course and scope of employment including the constitutional deprivation. (Petition for Rehearing p. 5-13)

II. REPLY TO POINT I THE COURT OF APPEALS CORRECTLY APPLIED TEXAS LAW.

Respondent claims that the Court of Appeals did not find the insurance contract was ambiguous. (Brief in Opposition, p. 4) The Court clearly holds that the contract is ambiguous:

> We remain convinced that, at least in the abstract, the policy language is ambiguous: It is susceptible of at least two interpretations. On the other hand, the language could mean that coverage is narrowly restricted to official law enforcement activity; on the other hand, the wording could be read more broadly as extending coverage to all acts that occur within an uninterrupted series of law enforcement activity.
> The dispute in this case centers on the ambiguous terms "within the scope of employment > or official duties" and "in the regular course of duty." Where we went awry in our original opinion was in stopping at the point of finding ambiguity and thus automatically construing the terms in question against the insurer.

(App. B, p. 10, 11)[2]

The Court clearly finds the contract ambiguous the second time. The panel initially found the contract ambiguous as well. (App. A, p. 14-20)[3].

The Court of Appeals' reliance on the thirty-four year old case of Smith v. M System Food Stores, Inc. 297 S.W.2d 112 (Tex. 1957), a case used by both the District Court and the Court of Appeals as authority for this holding, is far removed both factually and legally from the case at bar. In Smith, a security guard arrested a shoplifter and then got in an argument with a bystander ultimately assaulting the bystander. The bystander was not involved in the shoplifting and was not under arrest or detention and the Court found, on the facts of that case, that the security guard was reacting to an insult made by the bystander and was not within the course and scope of his employment. The fact that both the District Court and the Court of Appeals would use as their only authority, a case cited only eleven times in thirty-four years (the last cite was seven years ago) and ignore cases directly in point involving sexual abuse and harassment such as Bushell v. Dean, 781 S.W.2d 652, (Tex. App. -- Austin, 1989, rev'd on other grounds, 803 S.W.2d 711 (Tex. 1990) (Sexual harassment by a supervisor, including sexual assault, was within the course and scope of employment.); Nagel Mfg. & Supply Co. v. Ulloa, 812 S.W.2d 78 (Tex. App. -- Austin, 1991, no writ) (A male employee was in the course and scope of his employment and his employer was liable for his sexual harassment and assault of a female co-worker.) Bryson v. State, 807 S.W.2d 742, on remand 820 S.W.2d 197 (Tex. App. -- 13th Dist. 1991); (A police chief who engaged in sexual mistreatment of subordinate was acting under color of his office and in an official capacity, under Section 39.02 Texas Penal Code) indicates the extreme to which both courts had to go in order to deny Petitioner due process and a jury trial. This Court should note that although the Texas Supreme Court did not rule on the question of course and scope of employment in Bushell v. Dean, it did issue a written opinion, 803 S.W.2d 711 (Tex. 1990) and did not disturb the intermediate courts findings and opinion on course and scope. It is evident that the District Court and the Court of Appeals had to go to great lengths to ignore current Texas cases in point by the very fact that they relied on a thirty-four year old seldom cited opinion with facts far different then those at bar, as the only basis for the denial of due process and a jury trial to the Petitioner.

III. REPLY TO POINT II THERE WAS NO NEED TO CERTIFY A QUESTION TO THE TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

The Respondent inaccurately states that the Petitioner did not request that certain questions be certified by the Court of Appeals to the Supreme Court for the State of Texas. In her Reply Brief to the Court of Appeals, McLaren requested certification as follows:

> The Appellant moves the Court to certify this matter to the Texas Supreme Court on certified question for the determination of Texas law governing the duty to defend; duty to indemnify; interpretation of the proper measure of damages under the duty to defend; the failure to defend; the proper interpretation to be given under the terms and conditions of this insurance policy, and in particular the application of the rule of force and intentional torts such as the case at bar. (Appellant's Reply Brief filed August 26, 1991, p. 22).

The "rule of force doctrine" is a Texas application of the Doctrine of Respondeat

Superior to employers who authorize their employees to use force. Rosales v. American Busline, Inc., 598 S.W.2d 706 (Tex. Civ. App. -- El Paso, 1980, writ ref'd n.r.e.) Under the Rule of Force an employer is held strictly liable for assaults committed by its employees who are permitted to use force in furtherance of the employers business.

Roberta McLaren renewed her request that the Court certify questions of course and scope of employment and limitations in her Petition for Rehearing (p. 14) and in Appellant's Motion to Stay Mandate and Certify Questions to the Texas Supreme Court and/or for Reconsideration, (p. 1-6) and in her Rejoinder to the Response of Special Risks, Inc. to Appellant's Motion to Stay Mandate and to Certify Questions to the Texas Supreme Court and/or For Reconsideration (p. 2-6).

IV. REPLY TO POINT III THE PETITIONER FAILED TO RAISE THE ISSUE OF DENIAL OF DUE PROCESS AND OBTAIN A RULING ON THAT ISSUE IN THE COURTS BELOW.

Contrary to the contention of Respondent in its Brief in Opposition (p. 6), the Petitioner raised the federal due process issue about the retroactive application of the Murray v. San Jacinto Agency, Inc. 800 S.W.2d 826 (Tex. 1990) statute of limitations rule beginning with Plaintiff Roberta McLaren's response to Defendant Imperial Casualty and Indemnity Company's Motion for Summary Judgment (R. 972, 982) when she argued to the District Court:

> In the event the Court should decide the two year statute of limitation applies as claimed by the Defendant, the Plaintiff would show that the decision of the Texas Supreme Court in Arnold v. National County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, supra, which was decided only three years prior, in 1987 was relied upon by the Plaintiff and her counsel as being the applicable statute of limitations and said case clearly held that all such causes of action did not accrue until the underlying causes of action had been concluded. Thus, while Plaintiff was relying on the limitation accruing not sooner than June 26, 1991, she filed this action May 15, 1990. Thus, Plaintiff would show that the due process of law under the Texas Constitution as well as the Fourteenth Amendment (emphasis added) to the United States Constitution requires that the Court exercise its discretion based on considerations of fairness and policy grounds, which preclude retroactivity of the new holding to the extent that there was public reliance on the formal rule and the lack of ability to foresee a coming change in the law. The Courts have held that a change in the law would not apply retrospectively to deny a right formerly held by a litigant. Sanchez v. Schindler, 651 S.W.2d 249 (Tex. 1983) (and cases cited therein), Chase Commercial Corporation v.

Datapoint Corporation, 774 S.W.2d 359 (Tex. App. -- Dallas, 1989, no writ).

The Sanchez case cites Linkletter v. Walker, 381 U.S. 618 (1965); Great Northern Railway Co. v. Sunburst Oil & Refining Co., 287 U.S. 358 (1932) as authority for the application of the due process clause to the retroactive application of a court decision announcing new law.

Appellant persisted in the Court of Appeals in her Brief (p. 43-48) and Reply Brief (p. 1-8) and Petition for Rehearing (p. 11, 13, 14) in objecting to the fundamental unfairness of the application of the Murray Rule to her cause of action.

CONCLUSION

Petitioner has properly and accurately represented the record to this Court and has duly and properly preserved the points of error upon which she relies and requests this Court to consider. The Petitioner respectfully moves this Court to grant her Petition for Certiorari.
